....Many of our readers will be sorry to learn of the dreadful misfortune which has befallen Rev. Dr. A. G. McManaway of Ouachita College, Arkansas. One night last week as he was blowing out a lamp it exploded, burning his face very severely and sadly injuring his eyes. But for the timely aid of his wife, it would have been more serious. We sympathize with our brother, and pray God may be with him in this trial.

....The Rev. Dr. W. N. Searles, pastor of the Tremont Methodist Episcopal Church, 178th street and Washington avenue, has exposed himself to some adverse criticism by refusing to baptize the fourteen months-old daughter of Dr. Walter E. Andrews, one of the stewards of the church, because she was dying, and the minister contended, did not need it for its salvation. Both the parents of the child and their friends who attend Dr. Searles' church are very much incensed over his action.—New York Herald.

ASSOCIATIONS.

LITTLE RIVER.

This Association met with Friendship church at Bunn's Level. This is an old church and surrounded by good people who are well-to-do; it had in its membership at one time brethren Sam Cannady, John Parefoy, the Williams and others whose names have helped to make the history of the Baptists in the State. In 1816 the Baptist State Convention held its session with this church. I met many who were present and who still remember the details of this meeting.

HOW I GOT THERE.—I got off the cars at Sanford, and as is usual was at once confronted by a most accommodating individual, much interested in my comfort and anxious to speed me on my way, but had no more idea where I wanted to go than I myself had. All I knew was that I wanted to go to the Little River Association, and all he knew was he wanted to carry me. With these two known quantities, we started out to solve the unknown. I will hardly find a better place to tell that Bro. Boone was with me, and was a party to this much of the transaction. I am not selling any secrets when I inform the reader that our horse was a gray one, and blind at that. This last the proprietor of the livery omitted to mention. This was not the worst difficulty before us; thirty miles of deep sand separated us from the Association, instead of twelve or fifteen, as we had thought. This added to the unwelcome revelation that we had shipped on a "narrow guage" buggy, rendered the situation serious, and I soon found that I was doomed to a divorce from my companion or to retrace with him the steps to the point from which we had started; the first of the alternatives I chose, and left him with the blind gray and the narrow gauge buggy, a dozen, more or less, of fine mountain apples and a driver overjoyed at the turn which affairs had taken. I am now in the "middle of the road" with no encumbrance, save a light grip and overcoat. Just how far I walked and how persistently I sought help from those I met and from those who lived in their little homes on the roadside, the public may never be fully aware. I am, however, clearly of the opinion that riding behind a broken down horse is worse than walking, and that between a broad gauge ox cart and a narrow gauge buggy, there is eminently no comparison.

Saturday morning I am awakened by the ringing of Sister Rogers' breakfast bell, for I am in Lillington, where I had such sweet rest as to cause me to forget my troubles of the day before. From here Bro. John R. R-ers in a nice "turn out" carried me eight miles in little more than an hour.

The work of the Association was well nigh done, but as usual I found the RECORDER had been looked after by Bro. J. A. Campbell who never fails to do the handsome thing. The Moderator, Bro. J. H. Holloman, gave me an opportunity to talk to the brethren on this subject, and when I left on Sunday, I had the largest list of subscribers ever obtained at the Little River Association.

Brethren Campbell and King preached two excellent sermons on Sunday.

At the close of this service, I take my place with Bro. King, and at dark we are on the spot where I took leave of my companion on Friday before.

NOTES.

"Bro. J. A. Campbell has largely made Harnett county over again."—Dr. Charles F. Taylor.

Not a single barrel of corn has been destroyed on the Cape Fear River this year. What a blessing! Wonder if a number of the farmers here will not remember this when making their contributions to the Lord's work?

BLADEN COUNTY.

This Association was held last week with the church at White Oak in Bladen county. Four years ago I attended the Cedar Creek Association, which met at the same church. The church then was unfinished, and I found it in the same condition. Bro. Brunt is the pastor, and we hope the building, one of the best in this section, may be soon completed. Several new churches were added, and many of the brethren thought this a better session than that of last year.

Bro. Mitchell secured a liberal pledge for the Board of Education.

The financial condition of this section is much better than it has been for several years past. Bro. Brunt has a good school near the church; this is doing fine work in educating the boys and girls of this entire section. There are several young men here who hope to enter Wake Forest. Corn crops are fine and all gathered, hogs are fine and will soon be fat. The "holiness" preacher-fraud is abroad in the land.

I am sorry so many are not regarding the injunction of our Saviour: "Follow not after them," but this is always the case. No man was ever such a great rascal but found some followers, nor doctrine so monstrous but had its adherents. This will continue till the light of Him who lighteth the world shall pervade the hearts and homes of those thus deluded.

Bro. Mitchell will join me in thanking Bro. Bullard at Roseboro for the kindness shown us on our way to the Association and also on our return. In his comfortable home we had a substantial example of the meaning of the expression "the latch string is on the outside."

Passing Fayetteville on our way to the

we had time to attend the morning services at the Baptist church. Bro. Thomas had for his subject, "Hannah, the Mother of Samuel." His thoughts were full and strong, and hit hard whomsoever they hit. Mothers whose lives had been spent rocking the cradle with a tired foot, and with maternal consecration had remained at home with the child, got joy and consolation in the sermon; while those (if there were any) who had left the training of their children to others and found pleasure in fashion and in other pursuits, must have felt the arrows pierce, and gone home with troubled consciences.

J. C. C.

MOUNT ZION.

This body met with Bethesda church, Oct. 9, 1895. Bro. Geo. J. Dowell preached the introductory sermon. After the sermon the organization was effected. Bro. C. C. Horton was elected Moderator. This was Bro. Horton's first time to our Association, but the brethren had so fallen in love with him, they all seem to know him and asked him to take the chair and preside over them. Bro. C. R. Scott resumed his old place and and acted as Clerk. With these brethren to rule and write for us, we proceeded to business.

We have been rather unfortunate in our Moderators for the Association. Last year we had to lament the loss of our very dear Brother Albright, this year Dr. Carroll was missing. How strange are God's ways sometimes! We don't know about these things now; God will tell us after a while. His will be done.

The reading of the letters showed marked improvement along some lines of work, but considerable falling off in contributions. Nearly every church was represented.

Visiting brethren were invited to seats with us. Representatives: Dr. Mitchell for Ministerial Education, Bro. McIntyre for the RECORDER, Bro. T. J. Cobb for the N. C. Baptist, Bro. A. Johnson for the Orphanage. Visitors: Bro. Hilliard of High Point, Bro. Vernon of Pollokeville, Bro. J. H. Couch of Virginia, and Bro. Eaton, returned missionary from Siam, responded.

The usual committees were appointed by the Moderator.

Reports were read on all the objects of the Convention, and most of them discussed. Some of the speeches were of a high order. Brethren Van Deventer, Tyree, Cobb and Shipp made impressions that seemed to adhere to the minds of the brethren after the Association adjourned. All seemed to be filled with their subjects; but I did not hear so much comment on other efforts as on these brethren's speeches. Brother Reuben Shipp seems to be a monitor on the Associational Mission work.

The mission work within our bounds has been very encouraging this year. Bro. Hocutt has completed the house of worship at New River, and they have called him for half his time for next year. West Durham church have completed their house of worship and called Bro. W. A. Smith for half his time. He will locate there. Bro. Alvis Andrews is expecting to build a house of worship soon at Glenco.

Bethesda neighborhood is made up mostly of good people. They entertained the Association admirably well, and every one seemed to enjoy the occasion. Only one deficiency we saw: they have a very neat house of worship, but it is rather small for such an occasion. We hope they will add to, or build a new house before we meet them again.

Expressions of the Brethren on the Death of Dr. Durham.

Dr. Carter then said: "Dr. Durham had charge of the State mission work. Dr. Hufham who preceded him in that service will speak."

Dr. Hufham said when the telegram came announcing Dr. Durham's death it seemed as though the sky had been suddenly clouded over. Every one from the little children to the old men mourned. An old soldier who wore the gray took my hand and said, "Go and tell them what Cleveland county and the old soldiers feel." Everybody grieved. Throughout the State for weeks and months to come there will be weeping as the news is told that this good man is gone. He was the most widely known of any of us. He was the most loved, the most trusted, and no man in the denomination had such a hold upon the hearts of brethren and sisters, and I can say that to day a Prince in Israel has fallen. His death has brought grief to a hundred thousand homes and hearts, such is the affection that clustered around him. Years before the Revolution Alamance Baptists were persecuted and driven from their homes. This man's ancestors were among them, and among those who in spite of persecution planted churches and preached the gospel. He grew up in the region where the morning and evening sun glorified King's Mountain, where the traditions of Cowpen's and Ramseur's Mill, with their deeds of heroism and courage are told, and the stories of the bravery of our ancestors who fought for religious and civil liberty. He could not help being patriotic considering the blood that was in him.

Then the war came, and father and two sons went into the war, he the younger of them. They came out to serve their country and their Lord. At Chancellorsville news came that the father had died in another part of the field. That boy said, "My father is dead, let me go look for his body." But they said, "You can do him no good, and maybe by night the South will need every man." He did not go. Do you wonder men trusted a man like that? That man got his education in the army, and he was a soldier to the end of his life. His only question was, "What are the orders?" and once he had gotten orders, he never stopped to reason. "His not to make reply, his not to ask the reason why, his but to do and die." He was entirely free from ambition in the ordinary sense of the word. He had the soldier's ambition to serve. He did not seek promotion. He had in him just those qualities which command success, the qualities of Wellington, Napoleon and Washington, mastery of detail, rapid generalization, instant decision, pluck, cheerfulness and perseverance. They would have made him a great master of railroads, of manufacturing or business enterprise. Yet he had laid all these powers at the feet of Jesus and consecrated all to Him. He had one purpose, and that was to glorify Jesus Christ and spread the knowledge of His truth among men. I am thankful that God gave him to us, and though it is hard for us to understand why he is taken, we know that God can make no mistakes. It is pleasant to think that he has left these two boys to take his place, and that they will be enabled to follow the example of their father and fill the place that he has left.

Dear Recorder:—A telegram informs me of the death of Columbus Durham, and invites me to come to his funeral. I wish I could. I owe to him as much as to any man upon earth. When I went to college, an inexperienced boy of fifteen, he took me into his room and heart. He was a father to me. He was one of God's noblemen, true hearted and brave. There was in him a combination of gentleness and strength, zeal and wisdom, enthusiasm and consecration, such as few men possess. When he believed that he was right, no power could move him. He stood for truth and lived a life of unceasing self sacrifice. All who knew him most intimately loved him most devotedly. With childlike faith in the Holy Spirit he was a great preacher. There was no uncertain sound in his message. He believed in the Bible and proclaimed its truths "with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven." Cheerful, patient, studious, he plodded on in his great work, happy in the consciousness that he was trying all the time to please Christ. Let us rejoice that he is with the Lord whom he loved with all the intensity of a fervent soul.

May the God of all comfort sustain the bereaved wife and children.

A. C. DIXON.

To day's News and Observer brings the sad news that our beloved Brother Durham is dead. It came upon me as a great shock. I was entirely unprepared for it. He, I am sure, was ready, and although the Master's call was sudden it found him at his post. With him it is surely well. But Oh, what will we do without him!

My heart goes out to his bereaved family. May God keep, and bless, and comfort them; and I am sure He will

We will miss our dear brother everywhere. There were times when some of us did not agree with him, but we always knew that his heart was right, and we all loved him.

I want to make a suggestion which I know would meet the hearty approval of our dear brother. He was laboring very hard to go to the Convention with all our missionaries fully paid.

He who so often led us to victory has fallen, no risen, and can no longer call us to service. But let us go forward brother pastors, and see to it that our Board of Missions reports no debt when we meet in Greensboro. We can do it. If all our pastors will press collections for State Missions from now until the Convention the work work will be done. The best tribute that we can lay on the grave of our dead Secretary will be to carry out his plans with reference to State Missions.

T. J. TAYLOR.

Warrenton, Nov. 15, 1895.

Dear Brother:—I am greatly shocked at the news of Dr. Durham's death. It is a great loss to us. God's providence is dark. The time the Convention needed him most, seemingly, is the time God says, "I need him up higher." God acts wisely and well. Our extremity will be God's opportunity to greatly bless us. We ought to raise the debt on State Missions at once and close up the great gap made by Durham's absence. I know of no man to take his place. God has a Joshua somewhere. Let the brethren look to God for another mission leader. He will be missed more than any man I know. He was our strongest man on the platform. A great man is fallen. He was a great man in many respects. His influence will abide. May God comfort his family.

Bro. Durham is dead! "Howl fir tree, for the cedar has fallen!" Dear good man, who will take his place? My heart turns to God, our refuge and strength.

The death of Dr. Durham is a calamity to the State, and an especially heavy loss to us just at this time. T. H. PRITCHARD.

I have just read the sad news of the death of our dear Brother Durham. What can we do without him! He will be missed as few men would be, but the Lord knows best. I loved him as dearly as any man in the State, and I feel sadder to-night than I have in many a day.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED.

By the State Mission Board, Saturday night, Nov. 16th:—

In common with Baptists throughout this State, the Board of Missions and Sunday-schools is called upon to mourn the death of a most efficient, zealous and successful colaborer, Rev. C. Durham, D. D., our Secretary since 1888; therefore Resolved, 1. That we recognize the will and the wisdom of our Heavenly Father, and bow in submission to him, grateful for the life and labors and triumphant death of our brother.

2. That we thus put on record our appreciation of our brother as a soldier of the Lord, zealous, energetic, indomitable, faithful and consecrated; and that we hold in loving remembrance his services in the capacity as Secretary of this Board.

3. That we extend heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family, and commend them to the mercy of our Father in heaven.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be put upon the minutes of the Board of State Missions and Sunday schools, and a copy published in the BIBLICAL RECORDER.

Offered by J. D. HUFHAM, Com.

By the Thomasville Baptist Orphanage:—

WHEREAS, We have learned with profound sorrow of the death of Dr. C. Durham, a Trustee of this Institution; therefore

Resolved, That in the death of this arduous servant of God, we feel that the Orphanage has lost a staunch friend and supporter and the orphan a benefactor, whose place can be filled only by direction of Him who is the Father of the fatherless.

Resolved, That while we bow in humble submission to the will of our God and Father, we earnestly pray that the mantel of our departed friend may fall upon the shoulders of one imbued with a spirit of love and solicitude for the orphan and the maintenance of this "city of refuge," in which the needy and helpless may be trained in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord," and fitted for the duties and responsibilities of life and a home in heaven.

Resolved, That we tender the bereaved family our unfeigned sympathy and condolence, and pray that God's comforting and sustaining grace may be abundantly imparted to them in this great affliction.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, and a copy furnished the BIBLICAL RECORDER for publication.

EXPRESSIONS OF THE PRESS.

The death of Rev. Columbus Durham removes a potent force from North Carolina, for he was a man who made himself felt in church and state. He was a great man of industry, willing always to spend himself in the cause that he espoused. He was a resolute man whom nothing daunted. His love for the Baptist church—its glory and its enlargement—was the passion of his life. To it he gave every energy of mind and body, making all other things secondary. He was a prodigious worker and his ardor and devotion won for him a place as leader in a great church. It may be that he shortened his days by his incessant labor. It is certain that he put the advancement of his church and its institutions above all earthly things, and it was this whole-hearted service that gave him influence in his church which now mourns his death.—News and Observer.

The Messenger regrets to hear of the death of Rev. Dr. Columbus Durham, of Raleigh, on Thursday night. He had been unwell for some weeks, but his death was sudden, from heart disease. He was aged 51, and was a brother of the late Plato Durham, a lawyer and politician of talents in Reconstruction times, and died in manhood's prime. The two brothers served in the Confederate army. Dr. Durham was prominent in Baptist circles in North Carolina. He had talents, earnestness of conviction, intensity of purpose loved controversy and was always aggressive in the fight. He was a born fighter and was warp and woof a Baptist, believing in its doctrines with all his soul, and ready to defend and enforce them with pen and tongue any time and any where. He was not so well equipped, so well poised, so learned or really so able as some of his clerical brethren in the State, but perhaps none had so much of confident boldness, such zeal and ardor as he had in advocating his cause and presenting his convictions. His death is a distinct loss to his denomination and will be profoundly regretted among his people and by his friends outside of his denomination. He was born in Cleveland county, was president of the board of trustees of Wake Forest College, where he was educated and from which he graduated. In the fullness of his prime he is cut down, reminding us of "what shadows we are, what shadows we pursue."—Wilmington Messenger.

In the death of the Rev. Dr. Columbus Durham the Baptist denomination in North Carolina loses one of its very foremost men. He was a man of ability, of tremendous force of character, and a born fighter. He will be missed.—Charlotte Observer.

Our Leader Fallen—To the Work.

Dear Recorder:—Our leader has fallen. A man with the physical ability, with the consecrated common sense, with the courage, energy and enthusiasm has been taken from us at a time when it seemed we needed him most. "But the Lord reigneth."

When God took our beloved Bro. Bailey, we were comforted in the thought that we had one at hand to take up the unfinished work, but who is able to undertake the work he has left—a work needing a man with special qualifications?

Has the time come for State Mission work to cease? The destitute places in our State answer No. The work in foreign lands is dependent on the State Mission work. Has God taken our Secretary to let us see the magnitude and importance of this work as we have not seen it?

I think I hear from every quarter of our State the "well done," and the echo is taken up by the Master, who says to Durham, as he enters that land where mission work is not needed, "Well done; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

I want to ask that the fourth Sunday in November be observed as a day of prayer for State Missions, and a collection be taken, that the State Mission Board may come to the Convention without any debt. First, this will please the God of Missions, and it will please our brother in glory.

R. VAN DEVENTER.

Our Baby—The Ministers' Relief Board.

The last born, but the least cared for by our mother, the North Carolina Baptist State Convention. She gave it birth; but seems to be satisfied with giving it a meager support. It cries often, but seems to be regarded by but few. The little thing has been faring right well since receiving that liberal gift from that great, big hearted Eastern brother; and another big loaf by our dear Bro. Timberlake of Louisburg; but these are about gone now, and unless some other liberal-hearted brother or brethren shall open wide their hearts and pocket-books, I fear it is going to suffer during the coming blasts of winter. The meal is getting low in the barrel; the meat is about gone; the wood pile and coal-bin needs replenishing; and clothes are wearing threadbear. But, where is all to come from with nothing to buy with? The older children are more able to take care of themselves than this poor little weak child. It has such a poor showing.

But it does have hopes of life, and if its mother will give it half a chance, it will walk after awhile when it will show what it is. Very few take hold of its hand and admire it as it is. Some are rather inclined to push it down and say things discouraging about it. I wish mother would care more for it, and it would grow faster.

Brethren, have I misrepresented the child? Your "child." Let me say something here about the "children" of the "child." I fear some of us are going to "sin against the child." These "children" of the "child" are God's children. God gave them to us for a purpose, and many of them have almost fulfilled that purpose. They ought to be dear children to us for the good they have done us. Shall we fail to send rays of sunshine into their homes when it is our privilege to do so?

OUR CONTRIBUTIONS AS THEY ARE, COMPARED TO LAST YEAR.

At the Convention in Charlotte last year, we reported $985 31 collected. We have collected up to date for this year only $444 49. If we come up to our last year's contributions (and really we ought to contribute more) we shall have to raise $540.82 before the Convention meets.

We have given the beneficiaries but little this year compared to what they ought to have had, it seems to me. Now, to cut them off and say we are not going to help them half so much as we did last year, will not be in harmony with Baptist usage. Can we afford to do it? I trust the brethren will think of this and act according to honest convictions before the meeting of the Convention.

Our needs are great now for the Board. We have eleven beneficiaries on the list (twenty six in all, including their families), two applications awaiting action of the Board when we meet the last Wednesday in this month. Winter is coming on, and we want to appropriate all we can when we meet. Help us, brethren, and help now.

"Freely ye have received, freely give."

The Tent Meetings Closed.

Dear Recorder:—We closed our tent meetings to-night. They have been kept up with a lively interest for more than two months. But for the rain and cold weather we should pitch the tent in other parts of the city and country, and the good work should go on. I love the evangelistic work—my heart is in it, but I love the pastorate too. God has greatly honored His word as we have preached it. In this movement we have gone to the people, and have not waited for them to come to us. They have heard us. They have heeded. Many of them have believed and confessed the Saviour. During the whole campaign, pitching the tent at three points in the city, I think I am safe in saying that two hundred people made professions. Between forty and sixty have joined the Olivet (Second) Baptist church, of which I am pastor. They are all young men and young women. There is not a child among them. The pastor is beginning to feel that he has something to do, to train the young people for God and the church. Then a large number has gone to Dr. Pritchard's church and to the various denominations in the city. We are just beginning to see more and more the results of this tent work in the growing and suburban portions of our city. There has not only been a large number received into our churches, but two very hopeful and promising missions have been organized, one in the eastern and the other in the extreme southern part of the city. They have flourishing Sunday-schools at both places, with ninety and seventy-five scholars enrolled respectively. This means in the near future, two additional Baptist churches in Charlotte. A committee from the churches write to-day to arrange for the selection of lots for houses of worship at these points.

Dr. Pritchard and I did nearly all the preaching. We have been preaching every day for more than two months. The Doctor can preach as well as kill birds. I think he went out the next day after the bird law expired. In the out set of the meetings Dr. L. B. Plummer, of Altoona, Pa., Rev. D. M. Austin, Dr. John Mitchell, and Rev. A. L. Betts preached for us. We owe Bro. Plummer a debt of gratitude and thanks for loaning us the tent. L. B. PRUITT.

Last Notice.

Before another issue of the RECORDER goes to its readers, the Committee on Entertainment will have closed their books. By the 25th of November we expect to assign the delegates to the Convention and the Y. P. B. U. to their homes; and those who fail to send their names by that time, we cannot promise to entertain. Brethren, please attend to this matter at once; don't retard the work of assignment by delay.

Delegates from the W. M. Societies will please promptly forward their names to Mrs. C. E. Holton, Pres't W. M. S., Greensboro, N. C.

Remember that we want all names before the 25th of November.

The Foreign Mission Work.

Dear Recorder:—The call to the work of Foreign Missions is explicit and imperative. The Great Head of the church says, "Go ye." This only to the missionary? "How shall they preach except they be sent?" The duty is clear—clear to pastors and their flocks.

The call of the missionaries to the foreign work is a call to us at home to support them. Our Board at Richmond sees the situation as few others can. Our great body of Southern Baptists are morally responsible to them, and should heed their earnest appeals. North Carolina is asked to raise $9 000 for this work. We can and ought to raise that amount. The Board is in urgent need of funds now. Their appeal will test our loyalty to Christ. HENRY SHERRO.

Letter from University of Chicago.

Editor Recorder:—To-day we have a holiday at the University of Chicago. We celebrate in this way the recent gift of Mr. Rockefeller to the University. Everybody and everything has gone wild since the gift was announced. The foot-ball team was playing a game on the University grounds with the University of Wisconsin team when the news was made known. They had played a losing game before, but immediately took new spirit and won the game. The same quickening seems to move the whole University. Last (Tuesday) night was set apart for official celebration. Students and faculty assembled in Kent Auditorium, prayers of thanksgiving were made, songs of jubilee—one especially composed for the occasion—sung, and representatives of every interest of the University allowed to express themselves upon the significance of the gift. Prof. Von Holst of the History department and Prof Laughlin of the Political Economy department vigorously combatted the idea of a tinge of dishonor resting on Mr. Rockefeller's methods of money getting. Prof. Von Holst said:

"If there is a man in the United States who has proved that he considers great wealth a great trust, if there is a man who in administering this trust has displayed the same judiciousness as he did in accumulating it,—his name is John D. Rockefeller."

After the meeting broke up, bonfires were kindled and around them a crowd of yelling undergraduates remained until a late hour.

The terms of Mr. Rockefeller's new gift are these: one million cash, and two millions on the condition that the University shall raise as much more within five years. The University has no doubt of raising the money; a sentence in the telegram of gratitude sent last night to Mr. and Mrs. Rockefeller reads: "We will celebrate again when the $5,000,000 are won and before the century is out."

This makes $7,200,000 in all given by Mr. Rockefeller to the University. Thirteen years ago Dr. G. W. Northrup, now a teacher in the divinity school of the University, first interested Mr. Rockefeller in Christian education in Chicago. Now the history of the world cannot furnish a parallel to his munificence. He gives in his life time, others wait until they die. The object of his generosity is a University in a city where he has no local interests; he seems to have at heart the interests of our whole country and to build not for a day or a century but for all time. In whatever way we look at him we must regard him as an infinitely higher type of millionaire than the Jay Goulds who have no consideration for humanity.

President Harper is now delivering on Sunday evenings a series of lectures on Old Testament Prophecy, and just here it occurs to me to say that I fear the people of the South many of them have formed erroneous ideas about Dr. Harper's position. It is true he contends for an intelligent handling of the Old Testament, but that does not mean that he wants to destroy it. Far from it! His heart's desire seems to be to awaken the world to the fact that "The Old Testament not merely contains the Word of God; it is the Word of God." So far is he from teaching men to be skeptics, that he teaches them to be believers. I have yet to see a person who has heard Dr. Harper's lectures whose faith has suffered any injury, every one confesses that the spiritual edification gained from a lecture is not second to or inconsistent with the intellectual. When one hears Dr. Harper one cannot fail to have the impression that he feels he has a mission to perform, a message as sacred as a prophet's to deliver.

There are, I believe, no vegetarians in North Carolina, but there are people of all sorts in Chicago and even among the University students there is a club of vegetarians. I took dinner with the club a few evenings ago. I was given a seat where I had a good view of the whole dining room. A silk banner is stretched across the room and bears the inscription—"Live and Let Live," which, of course, must be regarded as the motto of the club, and not the prayer of the landlady to her boarders. The tables were neatly set and the dishes nicely and daintily prepared. We were served with a glass of spiced water, delicious vegetable soup, potatoes, corn, eggs and lettuce, and some kind of dessert of which I don't know the name. There seemed to be a spirit of good companionship among the members of the club—about thirty in number—and they chatted pleasantly and ate slowly. We were served by Mr. Moore, one of the members, who has written a little book on the subject of vegetarianism. I was well pleased with the club, but the next morning I returned to my diet of meat. [There are vegetarians in North Carolina, but they are not organized.]—EDITOR.

The Haskell Museum is nearing completion. It will be something unique in its line. In it will be a large room painted and furnished in ancient Egyptian style as far as it is possible at this late day. The museum will have collections that will be of especial interest to students of Oriental History and Comparative Religion. Its cost will amount to $100,000. It is a woman's monument to her husband. There are several such on the University campus.

I would like to say a few words on education at the University, but this letter is long enough.

An Address to the Colored Baptists of North Carolina.

Greetings:—We take this method of conveying to you our hearty congratulations for the hopeful conditions which a gracious and benign Lord has ordered and appointed, under which the great work pertaining to the development our our denominational interests may be executed. Indeed, we are entering upon a new era of church development, religious activity, and aggressive exertion along spiritual lines; and it is hopefully anticipated that an enthusiasm will sweep through our ranks "from the mountains to the seashore," in favor of co operation, the like of which has never been seen. The fire has already been kindled it began to blaze at the recent convention held in Oxford, N. C.; and we are earnestly praying that the blaze may not grow dim until every Baptist heart in the State has been touched, quickened, and aroused.

As a denomination, mighty in numerical strength, we have suffered long and grievously because of poor organization, poor management, and poor opportunities: but we believe that a brighter day has dawned and that the Church of Christ which we love and support will be able to exert its full measure of strength in the promotion of Christian work.

In many respects the recent Oxford Convention enjoys the distinction of being the most important and memorable convocation of colored Baptists ever held in the State; and this distinction is honorably sustained when it is known that in that body of heroes, the plan of co operation in missionary work among the colored people, proposed by and effected between the white Baptists of the North and South and the colored Baptists, was approved and the machinery necessary to operate the plan successfully provided. Those who were present and witnessed the transaction marvelled at the wonderful and visible leadings of providence in this regard. The plan indeed admirable, and every Baptist should secure a copy and become familiar with its contents.

The State was divided into three missionary districts—the Eastern, the Central, and the Western. The line separating the Eastern from the Central begins at Weldon and runs the Atlantic Coast Railway to Fayetteville, thence down the Cape Fear river to the ocean. The line dividing the Central from the Western begins at Danville and runs the Southern Railway to the Yadkin river, thence down said river to South Carolina line. Three missionaries were elected: for the Eastern district, Rev. J. A. Whitted; Central, Rev. A. B. Vincent; Western, Rev. P. F. Maloy—to begin labor November 1st, 1895. These gentlemen are true, trusty, and tried Baptists, and able to do excellent work. In addition to these district appointments, Rev. C. S. Brown was made General State Missionary to supervise the missionary work and to aid in pushing vigorously the various objects specified in the plan of co-operation. It is conceded by all that the brethren chosen to do this work are eminently qualified and deserve the hearty support of every loyal Baptist in the State.

We, therefore, issue this appeal and call upon you to aid this great movement in every way possible in order that the result may not fall below our anticipations. Talk about the work in your homes and on the streets. Let the people know the blessed news. We must reach the people. The Lord is truly at work in Israel. The work is yours; may the Lord interest you to do your part to make the movement a success. We also appeal to you, ministers, pastors, and loyal church loving Baptists, to help us to raise during this conventional year for the extension of this great work five thousand dollars. Will you help us by bringing this matter before your churches, union meetings, and associations and securing donations? We need your help, your influence, your co-operation in the promotion of the Baptist cause, in the State. Will you stand like men and help us?

We close this appeal by praying that the benediction of God may rest upon the work and bring success to the glory of His name. As members of the Board of Managers, we beg to subscribe our names as your faithful servants in the work of the Lord.

An Old and Most Reliable Concern.

The old established Buckeye Bell Foundry, Cincinnati, Ohio, The E. W. Vanduzen Co., proprietors, report that despite the financial distress throughout the country during the past two and one-half years, they have made almost as many bells for churches, fire alarms, &c., in 1894 and 1894 respectively as in any previous year, and for the first six months of 1895 have far exceeded any previous year of the firm's existence. Just now they are completing a magnificent chime of 13 bells for the Atlanta Exposition, another chime of 13,000 lbs. for one of the finest churches in the city of Chicago, another chime of bells is being made for an Ohio Lutheran church, besides several large fire bells of 4,000 and 5 000 lbs., and a 4,000 lbs. bell for the United States Government. They are also making a 20 000 lbs. monster bell for a large church in Cincinnati, which will contain on its surface the name of the donor, his immediate family, and of the Archbishop of Cincinnati, and of the President of the United States, and of the founders. It will be the largest bell ever made in this country.

Don't forget that you have covenanted with God, and your brethren, that you will bear your part of the expense of maintaining the worship of God. 2 Cor. 8: 11, 12.

The Importance of Missionary Literature and the Need of Prayer.

BY MISS MARY CROWDER, WADESBORO.

The good accomplished by missionary literature is invaluable. To do good in anything, or to become thoroughly interested in anything, we must first thoroughly understand it. In this respect our missionary literature has been of incalculable value to the missionary cause. It has enlightened our people and made them realize the needs of the heathen. It is not so much indifference among the majority of the people—the country people especially—as it is ignorance. When they are once made to understand that souls are being lost every day because the gospel is not sent to them, and that it is their duty to send it, even the poorest and feeblest gladly help. "They do not realize the hosts of heathendom, while every day life is real and very absorbing," and now if we can make the heathen also live before them, they will become as interested in mission work as in their own daily affairs. Who can estimate the good done by missionary tracts? Many of us are awakened to life and activity by the touching little stories which so faithfully portray a missionary's life. And often they move us to make greater sacrifices and to accept our lot more cheerfully. At our table when some member of the family begins to grumble we just have to mention that we are not yet reduced to "peas and salt and bread," and the murmurer is silenced.

In an article in the Foreign Mission Journal some one has suggested a missionary library. And why couldn't we have one? The little missionary leaflets which are so cheap might serve as a beginning. They can be gotten from the Baptist Mission Rooms in Baltimore for a very small amount. They would certainly prove beneficial. We should have one in every Society for the sake of our young people who, as I said before, must be informed before they can become interested in the work. "Information precedes inspiration." And "if Christianity is to have force in the world, it must be intelligent." After informing ourselves, our hearts go out more heartily and readily in sympathy for the heathen, and we can pray more intelligently. I will give an instance of this. In one of our Society meetings our President read a little tract by Mrs. T. Bryan called "The Need of Prayer for the Chinese Christians." This was an entirely new thought to all. Every one here, I suppose, prayed for the unconverted heathen, but not one had thought of praying for the converted. And how much these poor struggling Christians in foreign lands, who are beset with so many trials and temptations, need the prayers which we, through ignorance, so long withheld!

Missionary literature is of great importance, but prayer is needed far more. F. E. Ellis has truly said, "God's promises are the fulcrum and prayer is the lever by which we lift the interest of God's cause into success," and that "earnest, habitual prayer is the mightiest agent in mission work." We can do nothing alone, but with God's help all things can be accomplished. Prayer enables us to meet all difficulties without fainting. "It is the triple armor of the soul, an invulnerable defence."

From Miss White.

CANTON, Sept. 26, 1895

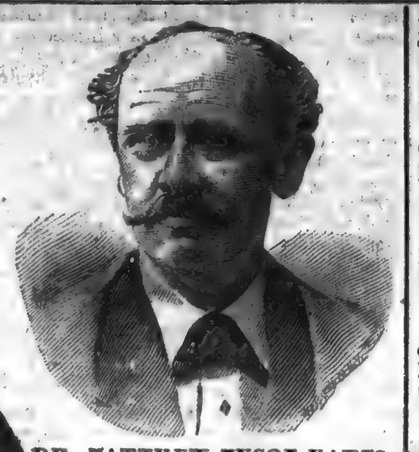
My Dear Miss Heck:—I make many apologies for saying many hard things about a Chinese heathen woman's life, but they come crowding on me until my brain swims and my heart groans.

My experiences for over half of the time I have spent in China have been among the Christian women and the girls in the schools, and I remember so vividly my first visit to the country and my first real touch with the lives of heathen women.

Whether it will be helpful or not for the women's missionary societies to come into personal correspondence with the missionaries, I am not prepared to say; but I can speak most confidently from the side of the missionaries and say it would be helpful to us. Still it seems rather childish to say that we long for glimpses into home life, for words of the little commonplace things, the song of birds, the blossoming out of trees, the laughter of the children at play, and the little jokes made around the tea table, the criticism of the last new book, and subject of the last lecture, and all the things that we do not hear out here. So many people write to us as if they thought we had left the earth and had forgotten all these things, and that they would no longer interest us. I do not wish to be ungrateful for any written word that comes, and every punctuation mark even is appreciated, but I am human enough yet to be interested in the things that interest our home folks. I can give them no such return for their bright, cheery letters, ours must often be full of the misery which surrounds us till it creeps into our hearts and letters ere we intend it. How close we need to stay to the Great Peace to keep the peace in our hearts while we live in the midst of so much sorrow.

I thank you, my dear Miss Heck, for your kind sympathy in the loss of my sister. The Father has been very tender and pitiful of me in this. He has drawn me close to his comfort. Heaven is very near to China, nearer than America. It will take longer to return to America than to go up there.

Please do not call yourself a stranger. Very well known to me you seem, though eye has not looked into eye, yet heart has met heart in the work we both love.



I pray that He may be your strength in the coming fall work, and that you may have many quiet times face to face in the intervals of work.

Yours in His love,
CLAUDIA J. WHITE

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

Church and Hall Lighting.

It is difficult to conceive how enthusiasm for, or even much interest in, any cause or purpose can be maintained in a poorly lighted church or hall. The perfect light for an audience room is one that is neither dim nor glaring, but clear and mellow. The best means of obtaining such a light is the use of Bailey's compound light spreading Reflectors. They are made in different styles and many handsome designs, for use with gas, electricity and oil. With either of these mediums, they produce a bright, soft light that floods and perfectly illuminates every portion of the room. The reflectors are made of corrugated silverplated glass. The manufactures guarantee them to give perfect satisfaction. A catalog and price list list will be mailed free to any one asking for it, by the Bailey Reflector Co., Liberty and First Avenues, Pittsburg, Pa.

More things are wrought by prayer
Rise like a fountain for me night and day.
For what are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them friend?
For so the whole world is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God.

Troubles spring from idleness, and grievous toils from needless ease; many without labor would live by their own wits only, but they break for want of stock—Franklin.

He who is determined to make no mistakes will probably make the one greatest mistake of fruitlessness. Better fail in half the efforts made than to fail to do anything. —Zion's Herald.

There is no true greatness except the greatness of usefulness.

will find it to their advantage to get the Minutes of their Association printed by us.

We have been doing this class of work for more than twenty years, and are familiar with the proper arrangement, and with the names of the brethren, &c., and when we print them the work is not only well done, but the Minutes are correct.

It would be better for all the work if the Minutes of all the Associations were printed at one place.

Clerks will do well to send us their Minutes.

Notes from Windsor.

I now begin to feel at home among the "Merry Wives of Windsor," but not the Windsor that Shakespeare wrote about. I am not prepared to say definitely what made the wives so merry in that Windsor, but I believe in this one, it is because they have good husbands. I think nothing else can make them happy.

As I have been here only twenty days, the time has been too short to learn all the good or evil, but I've learned some of both. I found the people anxiously awaiting my arrival, "hungry" as they say for preaching. They are not emotional and responsive, but quiet, calm and truly appreciative just such people as I had hoped to meet.

It is always a difficult thing to follow a strong man like Bro. J. B. Boone, and especially when he is aided by such a help meet as sister Boone, for although our people love him dearly, it seems that sister Boone is the "better man of the two." Now that is not saying any less for Bro. Boone, but it is saying much for sister Boone, though not more than deserves to be said.

Our ladies had been engaged in some work before sister Boone came here, but they had not accomplished much.

This past October one year ago she organized them into a Ladies' Aid Society and they began work in earnest. It has been largely a working society. Besides the spiritual good to all those engaged in it, they have raised in cash three hundred and twenty eight dollars. I am proud to say that it seems to be carried on by the force of its own momentum,—no, by the Lord's power. I meet with them nearly every week, read and pray with them, and withdraw.

We have received five members since I came—one by letter, one restored, and three by baptism. One of these is a young man who had once been a member of our church. He then joined another church and was excluded. Some time this year he became aware of the fact that when he united with the church, a fourteen year old boy, he was not regenerated. Since then he has professed religion and gives clear evidence that he has been recently converted. He demanded baptism at our hands, and I baptized him.

But while it is difficult to follow a strong man, there are some advantages also.

It takes a better driver to start a team and train it to pull, than to keep it going after it is started; and a better shepherd to gather the flock and get them into the lane than to keep them moving on; so maybe a much weaker man can keep running a machine that a stronger one has started.

I have been called to a small country church out six miles in the country. That leaves me open for only one more Sunday, and I think there is not much doubt about getting work for that Sunday.

We are not trying to set the world on fire, but are working on quietly and faithfully, and depend upon the Lord for success. It is not my place to draw, but to work and let the Lord draw. He has promised to do it, and he is the only one who can do it successfully. Our congregations have been excellent.

Our pulpit set we hope will be here for next Sunday. Yours for hard work,

R. D. Cross.

Seminary Notes.

The Seminary Missionary Society held its regular monthly meeting last Friday, Nov. 1. The meeting was well attended and all seemed to be interested in missions. Bro. Thos. McCloy of China, read an interesting and instructive paper on the subject "Medical Missions in China." He pointed out very forcibly what a great advantage it is to a foreign missionary to have a knowledge of medicine, and be able to practice in his fields of labor.

Dr. Geo. B. Taylor, of Rome, Italy, spent a few days in Louisville this week. We were delighted to have the opportunity of having him make an address before the Seminary and the public in Norton Hall, Monday afternoon. He spoke of Italy and our work there. He reports the work as steadily advancing, and the prospect encouraging.

Evangelist B. Fay Mills and his assistants busily are engaged in conducting the series of meetings which began in Louisville about two weeks ago. Meetings are held at three different points in the city every day, and all the meetings seem to be well attended.

Everything is moving on nicely in the Seminary. All seem to be encouraged. There has been very little sickness among the students so far. Two or three, however, have been called home on account of sickness in their families.

May the Lord continue to bless the RECORDER and its many readers.

Good Pay, Light Work.

If you are a member of a North Carolina Baptist church, and if you want good paying, light work that will pay you liberally for your time as you plan it, write (with a two cent stamp for reply) to Box G, Raleigh, N. C. Either men or women may apply.

Jay Gould's estate, it is decided, will have to pay on $10,000,000 worth of realty.

From Rev. R. A. Moore.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—It has been a long time since I wrote a line for the readers of the dear old RECORDER, so I hope you will allow me space to make some acknowledgments of gratitude and correct some impressions that are abroad, in a running letter, which may serve to answer the many questions asked in the many letters of sympathy which I have received since my house was burned, and which I have not had the time to answer, for I never worked as hard to try to replace a house for my wife and little ones before winter.

To the good friends who entertained such kind words and devout prayers for me at the Tabernacle Sunday-school Chautauqua, and the contributions made to refurnish Mrs Moore's kitchen, and the concert at Hotel Townsend for the refurnishing of her dining room when rebuilt, to the citizens of Red Springs and vicinity for the meeting held to appoint a committee on rebuilding my house, I shall ever feel grateful. To my good neighbors for their many tokens of kindness shown me in the time of need, I am thankful. The entire contents of only three rooms were destroyed; four rooms were emptied of all furniture, trunks, &c., leaving only scattered articles, many good books, and cash less than $100, and not $600.

The committee of citizens, viz: Messrs. R. F. DeVane and W. W. Williams, lumber manufacturers, A. B. Pearsall, lumber dealer, and J. M. Cook, builder, have borne the burden of the building, many others assisting as they felt willing or able, to smaller helps, in work or material or cash.

I am thankful the entire building is covered, floored, furnished with windows and doors, except the front door. The ell is so nearly finished that wife and the little ones can be comfortable in it for the present; and while there is not room for much of our chattels a good man allows me to store my goods in a room, and my son in Greensboro gives me a room with him for his sister.

I found the fund contributed, including about $30 from me, had failed to reach expenses on material, wages, &c, by about $65. So I stopped all operations until I find some money to pay up what is due on the work. The carpenter told me, after a careful estimate, he thought $116 would finish the house. Then I will have a good convenient house again for the next Sunday-school Chautauqua, if I can get work to do to earn something.

I am so thankful that I can feel the fire was purely accidental, and that I have been able to hold out at such hard work, and that my health and spirits are so good. I work all the week and preach on Sunday.

Yours in Christ, R. A. MOORE.

Good Work at Pine Level.

Dear Recorder:—I have just closed a very good meeting at Pine Level, N. C. We had two professions of conversion and many backsliders and cold Christians reclaimed, not only of our church but of others. It was a good meeting, taking into consideration the circumstances by which we were surrounded. I believe much good was accomplished. Christians covenanted together to be more faithful in the work of the Lord in the future.

Some will probably come into our church at our next meeting. Our church is weak at this place. Pray for us.

Rev. D. D. Edwards of Morrisville, N. C., was with me three days and done efficient and acceptable work. He is a good brother and his heart is in the work of saving souls: he makes sacrifices to this end.

Rev. J. H. Worley of the Free Will Baptist church was with us part of the time. He preached for me one time and did good service.

To the Lord be all the praise and glory.

W. M. SORRELL

The State Hospital.

CHAPEL HILL, Nov. 11.—I had much pleasure recently in visiting the State Hospital at Morganton. Dr. Murphy was absent at the time, but I was shown every courtesy by Dr. Isaac M. Taylor. Everywhere was the stamp of wise and skilful management. Grounds, buildings, wards, barns and gardens all told of the master mind that governs the institution. Had I never seen an insane person or an insane asylum I would not have known that I was visiting a hospital for the treatment of the insane. Some of the patients were sitting in groups on the grounds, others were working with wheelbarrows, shovels, hoes or picks, while others were busy in the wards either at work or in self-amusement. Not a shriek or cry was made during the morning of my visit: not an improper act or word marked any of the hundred patients that I saw. I did not go into the most violent wards, for I did not wish to. In the laundry were insane patients working by the side of sane employes and scarcely distinguishable. Everywhere that work was going on the insane seemed to have an equal hand in it and an equal interest in it. They were treated, as far as possible, as if they were not insane but sane. Employment, employment, employment; that is the great secret of health, both mental and physical. Maximum of employment, minimum of drugs, and pleasant environment, is the wonderful wise rule in the State Hospital. I visited the parlor and sitting-room in a female ward. They were as tasteful, refined and genteel as at the best hotels in North Carolina. The patients were reading, sewing, knitting, playing the piano. The decorum was perfect. I saw a squad of fifty patients coming from field labor; all clad in laboring clothes. They had something to live for; something to do; something to take an interest in; something to prevent introspection, that baleful basis of misery.

It was a great pleasure to see applied in an asylum for the insane the great common sense principles that regulate humanity in its daily life; to see the insane treated, as far as possible, like the sane; their physical energies employed in physical labor; their thoughts diverted from unhappy channels by constant and even laborious occupations; their surroundings refined, comfortable even beautiful. Knowing somewhat of the almost endless difficulties that beset an executive officer in charge of a large institution, and also somewhat of the exceedingly difficult problem of treating the insane, I was amazed to find united in one man such rare talents in both directions.

I hope the day will soon come when the State's University for the education of her youth will be as thoroughly equipped and as admirably managed as the State Hospital for the treatment of the insane at Morganton.—Geo. T. Winston, in Charlotte Observer.

That's where Pearline goes.

Wherever there's hardwork for women, there it's needed. Easy washing, goes with it.

Easy washing and better washing. Washing that doesn't wear out the clothes, or hurt the hands or fabric, or tire the washer. Washing that saves money but costs no more than the washing that wastes it. When it does all this and more, is it any wonder that Pearline goes? And it does go. It goes to the help of millions of women every day. But there are some who won't be helped. And they're the ones who need it most.

Blowing Peddlers and some grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—but what a puff for Pearline! 188 JAMES PYLE, New York.

Trolley Cars and Pills.

From the Evening News, Newark, N. J.

Mrs. Anna Burns, of 838 Plane Street, Newark, N. J., is a decidedly pretty brunette, twenty six years old, tall, and a pleasant conversationalist. On the ground floor of her residence she conducts a well ordered candy store. When our reporter visited her store, she in response to a question told him a very interesting story.

"Until about two months" she began, "I enjoyed the very best of health and could work night and day if necessary. Suddenly, and without any apparent cause, I began to suffer from intense pains in my head, in my limbs and temples. Almost distracted with this seemingly never ending pain, I tried cure after cure, prescription after prescription and almost a gallon of medicine of all kinds. Nothing did me any good. In fact I became worse. The knuckles of my hands soon became cramped and the pain in my hips became more and more distressing each day. Business in the store had to be attended to, however, and so I was obliged, suffering as I was, to keep more or less on my feet and occasionally I was forced to go out. This was the ordeal I dreaded. Each time I went out I trembled when I came near the car tracks for my pain at times was so severe that I was obliged to stand perfectly still no matter where I was. On one occasion I was seized in this way while I was crossing the tracks on Market Street and there I stood perfectly rigid, unable to move hand or foot while a trolley car came thundering along. Fortunately it was stopped before it struck me, but the dread of it lasted as long as my pain, for I never knew when crossing the tracks, whether I would not drop to the ground in my agony and be crushed to death. My anxiety to get well grew apace and I had about given up in despair when I saw in the Evening News one day, an advertisement of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Here was something I hadn't tried before and I lost no time in getting to the nearest drug store. There I paid fifty cents for a box of these truly wonderful health restoring pills. Before I had finished taking half of the pills I began to feel relieved; the pains in my hips gradually disappeared and for the first time in many days, I felt as if there was some hope. I continued to take the pills and the more I took, the better I felt. I finished one box, took another and now having taken only a part of the second fifty cents worth, I am free from all pain and as happy as the day is long. Since I began to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I have gained thirty pounds and now when I cross the car tracks I don't care if there is a dozen vehicles near by. It is a great relief I assure you, and suffering humanity has a never failing friend in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I know what I am talking about. I speak from experience."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never by loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2 50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

The Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne have collaborated in writing an article on household industries for The Youth's Companion. It will be published early in 1896.

Niram: A Dusky Idyl. By Laisdell Mitchell. The delicately tinted and illuminated exterior of this graceful volume promises a gem within worthy of such a casket, and there is no disappointment. The mystery, the deep pathos, the affectionate family and the religious capacity of the Negro are portrayed with rare fidelity and sympathy. Plantation chants, familiar and unfamiliar, are interspersed, and the warmth of Southern sentiment pervades the whole. Philadelphia: American Baptist Publication Society. 12mo. pp. 75. 75 cents.

Our thanks are due Mr. James H. Ennis, publisher of Turner's N. C. Almanac for 1896, which is just out. Turner's North Carolina Almanac, the "Old Reliable," is a faithful and valuable publication. There is no other to compare with it. It is needed every year by the merchant, lawyer, doctor, farmer, housekeeper. In fact, everybody should have Turner's N. C. Almanac. If you have never had one in your home, buy the Almanac of 1896 and hang it by your fireplace for reference and you will never go without one. Price only ten cents for sixty large pages of valuable information, and any one is worth it. The Almanac is for sale by merchants, druggists, postmasters, etc., or by the publisher, Jas. H. Ennis, Raleigh, N. C.

We have enjoyed very much the latest work from the prolific pen of Alvah Hovey, D. D., on "Christian Teaching and Life," published by the American Baptist Publication Society, at $1.25. It is an excellent book, clear and succinct. It begins by outlining the teaching of Christ, and showing that the author discusses Christian teaching as given by the apostles. This is followed by a chapter showing how teach- ings illustrate life, and another on the applica- tion of Christian teaching to life, and yet other on the improvement in Christian teaching. Would that we could say something that would lead many of our readers to secure a copy of this admirable work. Every one who has an opportunity to handle upon it to do so.—Religious Herald.

One of the most expensive books ever published will be "The Life of Christ," soon to be issued at Tours, France. It will have nearly four hundred illustrations reproduced in color from the paintings by James Tissot, upon the production of which the artist has been engaged for the past ten years. The first twenty copies of the book will sell for $1,000 each, and the remaining copies, 990 in all, for $300 each. The publishers ask no less than $12 for a specimen illustration. By a special concession from the artist and publishers to The Century, that magazine will be enabled to reproduce twelve of the choicest of these pictures in its Christmas number.

An Outline of Systematic Theology. By E. H. Johnson, D. D., and of Ecclesiology, Henry G. Weston, D. D. 883 pp., 8vo. Philadelphia, Pa.: American Baptist Publication Society. $3 50.

Dr. Johnson has the remarkable gift of writing with crystal clearness about the profoundest subject. We have not found in this entire book a single sentence "hard to be understood." It is a second edition, largely re-written, of his well known treatise, written in full view of the most recent "results" of theological study. The book is admirable, and leaves no excuse for any intelligent man's remaining ignorant of the great doctrines of the faith.

We do not remember to have seen the contrast between the Bible and "the Christian consciousness" as sources of spiritual knowledge so happily stated as by Dr. Johnson. He says: "To understand the Bible is as much easier than to understand the intimations of our nature concerning God, as to understand an adequate book on any obscure subject is easier than to write the book. The Bible tells us what is true; from the Christian consciousness we would have yet to discover what is true." And this, too, even were human nature perfect. Our author advocates "what is commonly believed among us," although he prefers what he calls the dynamic theory of plenary inspiration to the verbal theory. We hold to the latter, but they amount to the same thing. For if the Bible be plenarily inspired it is free from error and is of absolute authority, and the Holy Spirit is responsible for its language.

Concerning the second coming of Christ, Dr. Johnson fairly gives the arguments both for pre and post-millennarianism, and concludes by saying that neither has made out its case. This was Dr. Broadus' position.

The last 68 pages of the book contain the clearest and most satisfactory statement of the constitution and polity of a New Testament church we remember anywhere to have seen. It is from Dr. H. G Weston. While it fits admirably with the rest of this volume, it ought to be issued separately also.—Western Recorder.

The cheerful, unwrinkled, handsome and almost youthful face of Lincoln, in the very prime of manhood, which serves as frontispiece to McClure's for November, is perhaps the most interesting contribution ever made to Lincoln portraiture. It is surprising that this wonderful picture, which is the earliest portrait of Lincoln, and is from a daguerreotype owned by his son Robert T. Lincoln, has never before been engraved or published. It was taken at least twelve years before any other known portrait. There are five other portraits of Lincoln in the magazine, all interesting and rare, and the first chapters of a new biography. This new life of Lincoln is a genuinely fresh, vigorous, and absorbing narrative. In no other biography with which we are acquainted does the reader come so close to the young Lincoln. Miss Tarbell has succeeded in collecting such a fund of fact and anecdote from surviving contemporaries regarding Lincoln's youth in Kentucky and Indiana, his family, his manner of life, his employments, his education and his character, that a story more abounding in incident and interest, could not be asked. Even more unexpected than the information brought to light, is the abundance and interest of the pictures found to illustrate it. Never before have the scenes of Lincoln's early life been so fully and beautifully pictured.

You may eat cheap food and not be seriously hurt by it; but you cannot take cheap medicines without positive injury. If you use any substitute for Ayer's Sarsaparilla, you do so at the peril of your health, perhaps of your life. Insist on having Ayer's, and no other.

I call your special attention to a new policy issued by the Union Central Life Insurance Company. It is admitted by all who examine it to be the finest plan they have seen. State age, and write to Live for Something.

God did not design that the Christian's life should be an aimless one. He did not intend that the powers with which he endowed us should be frittered away in "as fine light as air." He has, rather, purposed that each life should have some fixed purpose, some centralized aim, some noble object of pursuit, which should eventuate in enduring accomplishments. But, alas, how many Christians seem to be living for nothing particularly! They appear contented to merely drift along with the current of every day affairs. They are not actuated by any high ambition. They reach out no hand to make others better by their touch. Wrapt up in self, they let others get along in their toils and trials, their burdens and bruises, as best they can. They ought to ponder well these burning words of the mighty Dr. Chalmers: "O, man immortal, live for something! Do good and leave behind you a monument of virtue that the streams of time can never destroy. Write your name by kindness, love and mercy, on the hearts of thousands you come in contact with year by year, and you will never be forgotten. No, your name, your deeds, will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind you as the stars on the brow of the morning. Good deeds will shine as brightly on the earth as the stars of heaven." The happiest Christians are they who live for something—something beyond themselves, something by which other hearts are comforted and other lives are ennobled. Even God lives for others. He is happy in making others happy. Christ's joy was most roundly filled when he was living for the weal of the forlorn and the afflicted. Heaven will be the sweeter to us for our having so lived that other lives were enriched by our hearty service. It is glorious to live thus.

DIED.

PARKER—On Wednesday morning, Oct. 16th, 1895, about 8 o'clock, Deacon George Fennell Parker, of Mt. Calvary Baptist church, Wayne county, N. C., quietly and peacefully crossed over the River and entered into the rest that remains to the Lord's people. His illness was of but a few hours' duration, and was attended with but little suffering. His life had been one of arduous toil for his family, his Redeemer, and his fellow-men.

In his death his family, the church he served so faithfully for more than twenty years as deacon, and the community in which he lived, have sustained an irreparable loss.

He was born Nov. 14th, 1832, and was, therefore, sixty-two years, eleven months, and two days old at the time of his death.

July 18th, 1875, Bro. Parker, with a few other brethren, organized the Mt. Calvary church. From that date to his death, he gave freely of his time, labor and money for the advancement of the church and her various objects of benevolence.

It was a consolation to him to know that his entire family—wife and seven children—were members of the church for which he so faithfully toiled.

He was buried Oct. 17th, 1895, the present pastor, Rev. A. J. Taylor, and the writer conducting the funeral obsequies. The latter, having been the pastor of the deceased and of his father the greater part of the time since 1862, preached the funeral sermon at the church, from 1 Cor. 3: 21-23, to the largest congregation that has ever met at the house of worship, a part of the hearers having to stand outside at the windows. The remains were then deposited in the burying ground near the church to await God's trumpet call to the glories of the resurrection morn.

Tributes of Respect.

A statement of facts will show to the public in what esteem a man is held by his fellow-citizens and his brethren much more satisfactorily than any word of praise we can write.

W. H. Smith was born in Person county, N. C., May 16th, 1831, and was reared there. When he attained his majority he was married to Mrs. Mahala Broach. He was appointed deputy sheriff and served in that capacity a while. Then he was elected high sheriff of the county for ten consecutive years. So well did he discharge the duties of that office that he received every ballot cast at one election.

After the death of his first wife he married Miss Ann E Wheeler of Granville county and removed to that county in December, 1868.

It was not long before his manifest fitness caused his appointment as a justice of the peace, the duties of which office he filled till age and feeble health disqualified him. He also at one time filled the responsible position of county commissioner.

He was a Royal Arch Mason, and was frequently called on by his brethren to perform the duties of Master of his lodge, and to represent them in the meetings of the Grand Lodge.

Soon after the constitution of Enon church in the Flat River Association, in 1875, he was received, and was the first adult male member baptized into its fellowship. From that time he was a prompt, punctual and faithful worker in the cause of the Master.

In 1880 he was chosen one of the deacons. He filled the position of superintendent of Sunday-school for a number of years. Few men have shown more zeal as a Sunday-school worker than he. Not only at church did he work, but after attending the school at church in the forenoon he would walk a considerable distance through the heat and the cold, month after month, and year after year, to Tar River Academy, and give his best efforts to the training of the young and the old in the community to fear God and keep his commandments. The effects of his labor in this field will probably last through time.

For some time after his health began to fail and he was unable to attend to any secular business, he would fill his seat at church. At last he was too feeble to meet the brethren; then nothing afforded him more satisfaction than to be visited by his pastor and brethren and talk with them about the Master's business and tell of his goodness in richly fulfilling his promises to his afflicted servant. For three years he lingered unable to walk or help himself in any way; but tenderly cared for by his dutiful children, there on August 18th, 1895, his Father called him up to occupy the place prepared for him, and to enjoy the rest that remaineth for the people of God.

Resolved, That a copy of this be furnished the family of the deceased brother, and the same be spread upon the minutes of the church.

B. F. HESTER, Chm. Com.

It hath pleased our Heavenly Father to take from us our much esteemed brother, John R. Lashley, who died in his twenty-ninth year. Bro. Lashley united with Shady Grove Baptist church at an early age, and lived a pious and exemplary life.

Whereas, we feel that the church has lost a useful member and the community a worthy citizen, therefore be it

Resolved 1. That while we much regret the loss of our brother, yet we humbly submit to the will of God.

2. That we tender to the bereaved family our warmest sympathy and condolence.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the church book, a copy sent to the mother, and one to the BIBLICAL RECORDER for publication.

Just Be Glad.

O heart of mird, we shouldn't Worry so!
What we've missed of calm, we couldn't
Have, you know!
What we've met of storm and pain,
And of sorrow's driving rain,
We can better meet again,
If it blow!

We have erred in that dark hour
We have known,
When the stars fell with the shower,
All alone.
Were not shine and shower blent
As the gracious Master meant?
Let us temper our content
With his own.

For, we know, not every morrow
Can be sad:
So, forgetting all the sorrow
We have had,
Let us fold away our fears,
And put by our foolish tears,
And through all the coming years
Just be glad.

—James Whitcomb Riley.

"Let's Play Like."

She wanted Charlie to go upstairs with her, but coaxing and reasoning were alike in vain. The little fellow only set his chubby feet and refused to budge.

"Come, dear," in her softest tone, "Annie wants you to go upstairs."

"I don't want to, screamed the belligerent.

"I know," the little nurse argued, "but let's play like it was lovely up there and we wanted to go."

For a minute Master Charlie hesitated, as though giving his imagination time to grasp it all, then a smile broke over his face, and, giving his hand to the patient little maid, he trotted contentedly upstairs.

One of the sweetest phases of child life is the ease with which the most unpromising things and circumstances are metamorphosed. Who of us can not remember the time when it changed the grassy floor of the play house into a carpet of velvet, and our calico dresses into shimmering silks and satins; or with what queenly airs we shook out our shaving trousers, and counted out rolls of greenbacks that had the suspicious look of having been picked from the peach tree in the back yard?

It is doubtful if the millionaire in his real carriage, with blooded horses, ever gets as much pleasure from them as does the urchin whose horses and carriage look to the uninitiated very like the kitchen broom and his mother's rocking chair. Did it ever occur to you that in the land of make believe there are only delightful things?

Children are optimists always, and while grown up people are sometimes adept at "playing like" all sorts of unpleasant things, children never are.

My lady's new dress may prove disappointing, and her ambitious dinner a failure, but at the make-believe banquet out under the apple tree the costumes are sure to be a success, and the imaginary strawberries and cake the most delicious. By most of us this happy faculty is put away when we put away childish things; there are a few, though, who carry it down to the years of sterner experience.

There is nothing that so truly shows the stuff of which we are made as the manner in which we choose to meet the disagreeably inevitable. From our first ventures in the world on to the end there are hard stairways to climb. This we may do either with stubborn complainings or with the brave resolution to "play like" it is not so bad, which in itself takes away half of the hardness.

The little girl who cheerfully makes believe that her limber, broken-nosed doll is the most beautiful creature in the world foreshadows the woman who will loyally hide, even from her inner self, the defects of those whom fate has assigned her as her portion.

There is no special merit in the simple fact of being a martyr when it means enduring that from which there is no escape.

The most tiresome people in the world are those that never lose sight of their afflictions, and are careful that no one else shall. There is a more excellent way. It is not possible for men and women to always ignore the ills of life. But, as one writer has said, "while we cannot keep the black crows from flying over our heads, we can prevent them from building nests in our hair."

We might save ourselves and the world in general a good deal of discomfort if, when "Forward, march!" seems a hard order, and the stairway uninviting, we close our eyes to the fact that we don't want to go, and bravely resolve to "play like" we do.—The Lookout.

Not Asking a Great Deal.

"I am afraid, Bobby, said his mother, "that when I tell your papa what a naughty boy you've been to day he will punish you."

"Have you got to tell him?" asked Bobby anxiously.

"Oh, yes; I shall tell him immediately after dinner."

The look of concern upon Bobby's face deepened, until a bright thought struck him. "Well, ma," he said, "give him a better dinner than usual. You might do that much for me."—Ex.

Lack of Ease in Conversation.

There is one great reason for this lack of conversational power: in too many cases the art is never practiced inside the home circle, writes Louise Royle in the August Ladies' Home Journal. No attempt at pleasant converse is ever made save when visitors are present; the various members of the family may gossip a little, or discuss purely personal affairs, but they make no attempt at entertaining talk. In point of fact, the art of conversation is like a game of battledoor and shuttlecock, one needs the quickness and dexterity of constant practice. In many busy households the only general gathering of the family is at mealtime—a time above all others when worry should be banished, if only for the sake of physical comfort. Yet this is the very time when the mother will complain of domestic worry, the father of business cares, and the daughters of shabby frocks.

All this should be changed; it ought to be a rule in all households that disagreeables are to be banished at mealtime. If complaints must be made let them come at a proper time, but do not imperil your digestion by eating while you are in an irritated and discontented frame of mind. Pleasant talk relieved by an occasional laugh will be more beneficial than pounds of pills. In the household there should not only be an avoidance of unpleasant topics, but an attempt to find agreeable ones. Each member of the family should come to the table prepared to say something pleasant. Any bright little story or merry joke, or any bit of world's news that will loosen the tongues and cause animated talk—how it will increase the brightness of the working day. There need be no profound discussion—it should be just lively touch and go talk.

To Boys Who Smoke.

If boys who smoke would only be sensible and see the folly of it, how much better it would be for them and others! Can you not see, do you not know, that you are going through a great deal of misery to do something you do not really like? You are enduring with a patience worthy of a better cause the suffering of a martyr in order to acquire a useless, bad habit; and trying to cultivate a taste that makes you sick. Why should you treat yourself so meanly? You know perfectly well that you do not smoke because you enjoy it. It is only when you think someone (but assuredly not your parents) is looking at you. You always do this with an air of intense self consciousness Everybody, including yourself, knows that you are on exhibition. And it is such a pitiable, cheap show, too. You think people are admiring you, which they are not. Why, so far from exciting admiration in the minds of the beholders, if you boys could hear the remarks which people make when they see you smoking, you would never again try a cigarette where human eyes could perceive you.

Moreover, it makes you disagreeable company. When you bring into society the horrid taint of stale tobacco in your hair and clothes, your absence is always more gratefully welcome than your presence. So don't smoke, boys. It makes you stupid, so it does not help you in your studies; it is injurious to the heart, so it does not aid you in athletic sports. It does not do you one particle of good; it makes you appear silly and ridiculous; it is as disagreeable and offensive to yourselves as it is to anybody else; you do not get a bit of comfort and real pleasure out of it, and you all know it—so pray do not smoke.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Looking Upward.

The following advice, given to a young married woman who was visited by another older and more experienced one, may be helpful to some of our readers:

When the visitor rose to go, the hostess came with her to the door, and out upon the pleasant piazza, which, however, looked a little dusty in the corners.

"Oh, dear!" said the young wife, "how provoking servants are! I told Mary to sweep the piazza thoroughly, and now look how dusty it is."

"Grace," said the older woman, looking into the disturbed young face with kindly, humorous eyes, "I am an old housekeeper. Let me give you a bit of advice: Never direct people's attention to defects. Unless you do so they will rarely see them."

"Now, if I had been in your place and noticed the dirt, I should have said: 'How blue the sky is!' or 'How beautiful the clouds are!' or 'How bracing the air is!' Then I should have looked up at that as I spoke, and should have gotten you safely down the steps and and out of sight, without your seeing the dust."—Household.

THE EXPOSITION

surpasses, in some respects, any Exposition yet held in America. Here you find, side by side, exhibits from Florida and Alaska, California and Maine, the United States of America and the United States of Brazil, Mexico and Canada, and so on until nearly every civilized nation on the globe is represented. On the terraces are found, among many other attractions, Arab, Chinese and Mexican villages, showing just how those people have their "daily walk and conversation."

AYER'S PILLS

A friend speaks through the Boothbay (Me.) Register, of the beneficial results he has recieved from a regular use of Ayer's Pills. He says: "I was feeling sick and tired and my stomach seemed all out of order. I tried a number of remedies, but none seemed to give me any relief until I was induced to try the old reliable Ayer's Pills. I have taken only one box, but I feel like a new man. I think they are the most pleasant and easy to take of anything I ever used, being so finely sugar-coated that even a child will take them. I urge upon all who are in need of a laxative to try Ayer's Pills. I am perfectly confident that they will do good."

"As a family medicine, I consider Ayer's Pills superior to all others. In my family, I have used them for years and never known them to fail. Can commend this medicine to mothers, as being mild, pleasant in action, and yet effective."—Mrs. U. I. Pugh, San Diego, Texas.

Thine are the cattle on a thousand hills
The valleys thick with corn their voices raise
In jubilant song and laughter; with thy praise
The night and morn are vocal, and the rills
Tell of thy river that forever fills
The boundless prairies with thy golden maize
To strengthen our weak heart. In every phase Nature proclaims thy triumph o'er earth's ills.

Thou dost provide, for thou our griefs hast known.
Hungry and thirsty thou earth's ways hast trod.
For us thou wast sore stricken, to atone
Upon the cross, kissing the Father's rod.
Thy gifts to soul and body may we own!
Who thankless takes, doth he not rob his God?

THANKSGIVING DAY would more properly be called "Forefathers' Day" or "Pilgrims' Day," as the keeping of it began with the Pilgrim Fathers. It is, consequently, an American institution. The Pilgrims came over to get rid of the evils of established religion, but unfortunately the first thing they did was to establish their own creed—a very hard one to hold up to at that. The modern Thanksgiving Day is without doubt a step in the direction of establishment of religion; not of any sect of Christendom, but of Christendom itself. It would not be so, however, if the President and the Governors would stop making their formal proclamations; for by these alone is the custom connected with the State. It is very true that these proclamations are merely formal and have no influence in getting people to be thankful or to worship God; but at the same time they put the State in the attitude of being partial to a religion, which it should not be. When it is perceived that the discontinuance of the proclamations would not affect the custom, every one will agree that they should be discontinued.

There are many arguments to commend Thanksgiving Day. It is a day for patriotic as well as godly reflections, a memorial day as well as a day for gratitude. Indeed, we prefer to think of it, as we have said, as Forefather's Day, which there is every reason to observe with thankfulness to the God of our fathers. Further than this, it is a good thing to turn men aside from the cares of every day life, and bring before them their dependence upon heaven and their obligations spiritually.

The value of a day depends altogether upon how one uses it. There is no reason why Thanksgiving Day, as a day of thankfulness to the Father, as a day of searching and weighing reasons for thankfulness, as a day of patriotic memories, should not be spent pleasantly, and further, there is every reason to spend it helpfully, lifting up and making happy some more unfortunate one that he may share the abundance of God's seasons and be thankful and helpful too. There are neighbors in reach of nearly every man able to help to whom Thanksgiving Day ought to be made a boon; and there are the orphans to whom we feel the day especially belongs. We hope many and large will be the collections and contributions (as a brother put it, "of everything that goes to make gravy").

WE printed a letter last week which was designed to show forth the better side of the lives of the insane. We were glad to see it; it made us feel better to read it, and it was comforting, no doubt, to some of our readers. So often we hear of the horrors of asylums, we may well thank God for the evidences we have that there is balm even for the victims of mental and nervous diseases. It is comforting to think that the unfortunate do not suffer as we have thought they did.

Not long ago an orphan asylum manager told us that orphans were "the happiest children on earth." We could hardly believe it at first. The bent of our mind had always been to pity them from the bottom of our heart. But thinking a moment of the essentials to a child's happiness, it was easy to perceive the error into which we had fallen. A child needs plenty to eat, clothes for comfort, health and playmates. He who never knew what it is to have a parent to guide, will not feel the need of one. Children do indeed hunger for people to love them, but they are loved in orphanages. Those who have charge of them love them, and they have their playmates. From the standpoint of one who knows what it is to have parents, an orphan's life is sad; but let us thank God that little children who lose their parents are young enough to forget and be happy.

WE cordially add our commendation to that of a number of our contemporaries with regard to the establishment of a plan for training nurses at the State Hospital at Morganton. A trained nurse in the average sick room is as good as a doctor and sometimes better. It is astonishing how many people suffer and die, not for want of medical attention, but by reason of improper nursing. We have heard physicians say that good nurses are just as useful as good physicians, and in some diseases more necessary. Between medicine and nursing, the latter is usually to be preferred.

It is a high privilege to be able to serve God in our work. Many have given that over to ministers, but it is a bad idea. Of all people not in the ministry, the trained nurse is foremost in opportunity to live for God. The school teacher may, the editor may, and others, too; but if a trained nurse is anything, she is a servant of God. As a profession for Christian women, it is not by any means to be despised. It means deprivation, it means unselfishness, but it also means high and holy service. From a business point of view, it is also to be commended; for nurses are given good incomes.

The training school at Morganton means a new era in our State in the matter of treating the sick.

THERE have been wonderful accounts in the papers of a man named Schlatter, for whom miraculous healing power is claimed. The accounts were written by newspaper correspondents who were sent by Eastern papers all the way to Denver, Col., to send back fascinating tales of this man's power to heal. There is fascination in such a character as Schlatter has been made out to be—pictured with long hair, a face modeled after that of artists' conception of the Messiah's, calm and gentle, mild of eye, the bearing of one minded to things far above earth, and clad in humblest garments. He has been reported to have cured thousands, and many people have come a thousand miles to get his blessing; but he has refused to be recompensed. There are hundreds who believe in him, and no doubt faith in him has cured hundreds. The fact is, there are people everywhere whose afflictions are only imaginary, and it happens that this impostor has obtained such notoriety that many of these victims of their own imaginations have come to him and been made well just as they were made sick—by imagining that they are well. It is a spectacle to wonder at, great throngs of people coming from every direction with little handkerchiefs in their hands, getting in line and one by one handing the cloth to Schlatter for his blessing, and then marching away and rejoicing in health and exceeding happiness.

We have the authority of learned physicians that no little of the sickness of human beings is caused by imagination. Physicians have confessed that in many cases they give medicine, not for any virtue of its own, but because many people feel more confident and like their doctor better if he gives them medicine. Schlatter has the faculty of making people confident by blessing their handkerchief. Faith is a great thing. Believe you are getting well, and it helps the doctor more than his prescriptions. Believe you will succeed, and you have won half the battle. Believe you are blessed, and you will be happy and thankful, even if there are tens of thousands who have more than you.

IF a newspaper should hint that a certain business man was not prosperous, most of us would sympathize with him if he entered suit. And yet there are scores of papers which persist in attacking the credit of all people engaged in agriculture, saying they are cultivating this, that and the other crop at a loss, are mortgaged, and always in financial straits. Suppose a paper should announce that the merchants of North Carolina have only half a supply of clothing and have no prospect of getting more than cost price for their meat and other supplies? And yet the farmer has been written up in this way until he likes it. We do not say the farmer is prosperous. We have talked with a number this year, in more than one part of the State, and every one of them was in better spirits and said he was in better plight than in many years. It did us good to hear the talk, and we never stopped to question its reliability. We were glad to see that they objected to being advertised as ruined or in a ruinous business, and that they were trying not to think of themselves as of all men the most unfortunate. If a man can honestly be cheerful and feel that he is well off, he should not be blamed for doing so. It is good for his health and for the happiness of those about him.

Thanksgiving Thoughts.

We have cause for thanking God that, in 1895, he has not permitted the politicians to destroy our government. The best way to show our thanks is not in feeding ourselves bountifully on the Puritanic "Thanksgiving Day," but in "distributing to the necessities of the saints," every day.

RICH'D H. LEWIS.
Kinston, N. C., Nov. 14, 1895.

For what should we give thanks in 1895? Adopting Chillingworth's famous dictum, I answer, "The Bible, the Bible alone, the religion of the Baptists." How may one best give, i. e., show thanks? By bringing himself and the world to accept and obey the Christ.

C. G. WELLS.
Warsaw, N. C., Nov. 14, 1895.

Dear Bro Bailey:—In response to your request I would say, let us return thanks for, first, returning prosperity; second, continued peace and plenty; third, a more hopeful feeling among our people generally; fourth, growing intelligence, especially in bursting the shackles of political parties and asserting our individual manhood; fifth, successful church work; sixth, development in our schools and colleges; seventh, God's loving care that is bringing us and our country safely through the threatened storm. Let us return our thanks by, first, opening our hearts fully to God; second, devoting lives completely to his service; third, observing the special day set apart, and observing it properly; fourth, making special contributions on that day to the Orphanage.

J. O. ALDERMAN.
Concord, N. C., Nov. 15, 1895.

Dear Brother:—There are three things for which we should praise and thank God on Thanksgiving day: (1) For the most part our barns and smoke-houses are full; (2) our institutions of learning are fuller than at any previous year; (3) so far as I have been able to ascertain, no year has ever been visited with such wonderful demonstrations of God's grace in the churches. But how shall we best give thanks? We can't well do this at the horse race, foot ball ground, or evening sociable (or dance); neither is it good economy to spend a month's wages on a big thanksgiving dinner, but let the day be given to prayer and meditation. Be sure to read, during the day, the book of Psalms, go to church, give all your big dinner money to the Orphanage and a big collection to State Missions. Let it be strictly a day of praise and thanksgiving.

The Christian church should give thanks for the apparent turning of the nations towards the principles of Christ. Russia has reason to hope for religious toleration. If Armenia has not been helped, it is a source of gratitude that the conscience of the Christian world has been somewhat aroused for the freedom of mankind. Also the world is ripening for the gospel, and this year the mission fields have been abundantly blessed.

JAMES LONG.
Goldsboro, N. C., Nov. 16, 1895.

For what especially should we be thankful? 1. As a nation, freedom from famine. God has opened his hand and filled the mouths of the people. He has preserved us from pestilence. Our country has been free from death dealing epidemics. He has warded off the calamities of war. Our nation is at peace. 2. As Baptists, the prosperity with which God has crowned our churches should move our hearts to humble gratitude. The last twelve months has been signalized by gracious uplifting and infilling revivals to most of our churches, and much people has been added to the Lord. How? "Let the redeemed of the Lord say so"—in their homes, in their churches. Give thanks to the orphans, to the worn out preachers, to God's poor at our doors.

J. K. FAINT.

One cause for devout thankfulness in 1895 is suggested by Mal. 3: 11. Whether we have robbed God or not, the hand of the devourer has been staid, and plenty abounds. One of the most appropriate ways of giving expression to our thankfulness is suggested by Prov. 3: 9. In John 12: 3 we have a beautiful expression of love and gratitude, and in Mark 14: 7 we are reminded that every worthy object of charity is to us the Saviour in disguise. Let every Baptist in and every friend of the Orphanage at Thomasville remember on Thanksgiving day the Lord's poor, and respond to their cry for help, as in the light of Matthew 25: 40.

C. S. CALDWELL.
Hickory, N. C., Nov. 15, 1895.

Every Christian should be thankful for the privilege of working another year with Jesus. What a privilege! What a work! What company! Let us express our thanks by a due appreciation of this privilege, a proper conception of the work, and a deeper sense of the abiding presence of our great co laborer. Fraternally,

J. G. BLALOCK.
Rockingham, N. C., Nov. 14, 1895.

Above all we should be thankful to a merciful God for the abundant crops of this year. Such a blessing and favor, while the country is so divided, corrupt, and guilty of so much crime, certainly is a wonderful exhibition of the goodness and forbearance of our Heavenly Father. "Praise the Lord."

M. M. LANDRUM.

We should thank God for a continuation of health and strength, and for the good things of the earth for the body as we have needed them; but more especially for the fresh evidences that he is our Father, that he is surely working out his kingdom on earth, and for the abundant blessings that have come on all those who labor with him. We should render thanks by publicly acknowledging him as the giver, thanking him for each blessing, and using each blessing for his glory, certainly by expending a liberal part in helping the needs, and in extending his kingdom on earth.

H. T. WILLIAMS.

I am thankful that as life becomes larger in its reaches and its responsibilities, that the truths of Christianity become sweeter and more sure; that the voice of nature is the voice of God; that God is in his world and that the world is growing better; that the past year has emphasized these truths.

We are grateful that 1895 is marked by a return of prosperity, a deepening of interest in education, an increase of effort on the part of Christian churches in "evangelizing their environment" as well as in sending the gospel to pagan lands.

As for myself, I will spend Thanksgiving in the country, communing with nature.

RUFUS WEAVER
Greensboro, N. C., Nov. 18, 1895.

For what especially in 1895 should we give thanks? We should give thanks for the abundant crops, and especially for reasonable prices. And more especially for God's signal blessings upon the labors of his people, and for the wide open doors to work for the Master, both at home and abroad. We should manifest our "thanks" in offerings, work, and praise.

Sincerely, G. L. MERRELL

Receiving Members.—An Interesting Case.

BY REV. G. W. GREENE.

Last year we built a small residence at Shiu Hing. The contract was given to a workman of some character from one of the neighboring villages, known to the pastor, but having little knowledge of the gospel. The work was greatly interfered with by officials, and the builder was greatly hindered. We had paid him all the money we could afford to pay out at that stage of the work, before the work was stopped. For several months he could not proceed with the work, and all the time his interests were suffering by the delay. He came to us very frequently begging us for more money, but we could not pay him more until we were able to go on with the work. For a long time it seemed probable that we should lose all we had already paid out. He seemed to think hard of us for not paying him more, but we did not feel it would be right to do so. During the progress of the work the pastor was in immediate charge of the work, and often there was friction between him and the builder, and not perfect agreement as to what the contract required. The same happened sometimes with other brethren. I feared that all these things, unavoidable though they seemed, would prejudice this man against the gospel.

During this time I spent a week at Shiu Hing. I noticed that he generally came in to our services at night, but remaining and listening attentively. Just before I was ready to go up and receive the work and pay the small balance due, I heard that the builder wished to be baptized. Arriving there I learned from the brethren that he was very anxious to be baptized and also his son. For some time he had seemed very favorably disposed toward the gospel. Then he began talking openly and telling all he met that he believed in Jesus. One of the brethren who slept in the same room with him peeped out of his curtain at night and observed that the man always knelt to pray before lying down. Next he went home and cast all the idols out of his house and announced himself a Christian. He was often found in the midst of a crowd earnestly telling them about Jesus and the plan of salvation.

As the pastor of the church was absent, I told the brethren I thought he had better wait till the pastor's return. But just before service on Sunday the pastor returned. The man applied for membership, made a good confession and was readily received. Then his son, just grown, was received, though his experience was not so clear as his father's. Then the old grandfather also applied for baptism. But when the pastor asked why he wished to be baptized, he said that as his son was going to be a Christian he thought it the proper thing to do likewise. He is quite old and feeble, and his mind did not seem very clear; so the brethren thought it would be better for him to wait awhile.

CARE IN RECEIVING MEMBERS.

I have been much gratified to observe that our churches here are very careful on this point. Their care might sometimes serve as a model for churches at home. Usually when a man makes up his mind to turn away from idols, to go against the wishes of all his kindred, and run the risk of being persecuted, there is a strong presumption that he is a sincere believer; but the churches by no means take it for granted that every one who applied shall be received. In four years' observation of half a dozen churches in China, I have heard of more applicants for baptism being asked to wait awhile than I heard of in all my twenty years' acquaintance with many churches in America. And our churches here do this under the lead of their native pastors without needing to be urged to it by the missionaries.

A few days ago a man applied for baptism here in Canton. One of the missionaries had talked with him and was satisfied. His brother had been converted in America, and is now a zealous preacher, and the applicant seemed to be sincere and have a fair knowledge of the gospel. But the pastor had heard that the man had made some remark that his being a church member would be useful to him if he should go to America, and so the pastor was afraid he might have improper motives, and he was not received.

There are several brethren who were converted in America and have returned to preach the gospel to their kindred and relatives, receiving money for their support from friends in America. Some months ago I spent a day and a night with one of these at his country village. I was impressed with his zeal and earnestness in talking of the gospel to his neighbors, and I pitied his loneliness in having no Christian near him. Last spring he asked a brother from another district to go and teach a Christian school for boys in his village. All summer these two brethren have been telling the good news to all who will hear; and now they report that several are ready for baptism, and ask the pastor of the Canton church to go and help them. He is quite glad to go, but expressed the fear that if some should apply with whom he was not fully satisfied he might feel embarrassed in declining to baptize them, while these two brethren with less experience thought they ought to be received. In such a case he would have no church to sustain him in his carefulness.

Last spring I baptized the first candidate at a new station, a bright boy of eighteen, though looking scarcely more than twelve. I asked the preacher at that station to examine him, first in my presence, and afterwards before the whole congregation, there being eight or ten Christians present. His questions were very searching and the boy's answers were eminently satisfactory.

CHINESE NAMES.

It is particularly difficult to represent these in English. While the Chinese characters are the same, they are pronounced in more than a dozen different ways in different parts of China. Making allowance for all these things, it still sometimes seem to us that the papers at home make sad work of Chinese geography. There is one name that has already occurred frequently in letters about our work in South China, and it is likely to continue to be prominent. It is our leading station outside of Canton, mentioned in the first paragraph of this letter. Two of our ladies, Miss North and Miss McMinn now live there, and it is likely others will go before long. Please tell all the RECORDER printers and proof readers how to spell it, and the RECORDER readers how to pronounce it. It is spelled, according to our dialect, S h i u H i n g. The first part is pronounced almost like shoe, and in pronouncing the two words together, the second is in a little higher tone than the first.

Christian, do the work near at hand, before you sigh for a field afar off. The busy, competent man is the one who deserves promotion. The user of his ten talents met the approval of his lord, while the non-using one-talent man was condemned and had his talent given to the working, faithful man. Once a do nothing home Christian transiently delighted a minister by saying he desired to go and preach the gospel to the heathen. The old minister thought for the moment that the young disciple was going to be a useful man in the Lord's work; but on inquiry, learned that the would-be missionary neither labored in, nor went to, a mission Sunday-school in a half mile of his home; yes, he professed to be willing to go thousands of miles over ocean to labor among the heathen, but did nothing to help the Lord's cause along at his own door. Brother, sister, do not omit the work at your own hand and before your own eyes, and dream how busy you could be a long distance off. The willing worker can always find something to do—first, at least, at and near his home; and afterwards abroad, as the door of opportunity may open and duty urge forward.

Scripture enjoins "Be filled with the Spirit." But there must be an emptying before a filling—emptying of wordly and sinful things to make room for the Spirit; for He is holy and will not dwell in a heart under the control of sinful desires and incitements, whatever the professions may be. Empty out the world, therefore, that the Spirit may come in.

Some of the domestic evils of intemperance are houses without windows, gardens without fences, field without tillage, trees without roots, children without education, principles, morals, or manners.—Franklin.

J. C. CADDELL, AGENT AND CORRESPONDENT.

THE books of our Convention will close for the year before another issue of the RECORDER is sent out. We are hoping and praying for a flood of remittances this week in response to the appeals to the pastors. We write now to advise every one having contributions to send without delay. Do not wait until the last moment.

MONDAY of this week work on the building of the Female University was resumed, and it will go forward now at least until the second story is completed. The trustees show their wisdom by not running ahead of their funds. We hope, however, that they will not have to stop the workmen again. If those who have made pledges will pay them promptly the work will go constantly on. The prospect for the institution was never more hopeful. Let us see to it that funds are forthcoming from now until the handsome building is completed, and the opportunities of a magnificently equipped institution are offered our young women.

THE rendering to God the things that are God's, and unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, at once finds lodgment in the heart of every rational and well-balanced man. The true observance of this divine enunciation makes the well-rounded Christian citizen. It would save us from the religious crank and fanatic who imagines he has a better sort of religion and more of it than other men have. It would free us from the presence of the selfish, sordid ingrate, who, like the hog, never looks up to him who thrashes down the acorns upon which he lives and grows fat. But in his place we would find not only a man made in the image of his Master, but one who realizes that he does not live by bread alone, and who looks up daily in grateful recognition for the bountiful blessings of a kind and loving Father.

FROM the Red Man, a paper published in Carlisle, Pa., in the interest of Indian education, we note that Senator Dawes states that during one period of five years, while he was in Congress, $18,000,000 were appropriated for gratuitous distribution in the Indian territory.

The same paper in commenting on this statement declares boldly that in one instance agents of one sort and another, out of $2,700,000 designed for the education of Indian children, put in their own pockets $700,000 for alleged services in securing the appropriation. And that in another appropriation these same fellows, or others like them, out of $350,000 sliced off for themselves $80,000 as a preliminary to the work of a division among the children of the "Red Man." If this be true, it is enough to arouse the righteous indignation of every American citizen who loves right and hates wrong.

IT WOULD be something out of the usual order of human events for any body of men to attempt so many and so radical measures as were passed in the recent South Carolina Constitutional Convention and not make some mistakes. We are willing that the test of time shall decide the wisdom or unwisdom of the new departures of our friends across their line. The refusal, however, to incorporate the mandatory support of State schools in the new Constitution has our hearty and unqualified endorsement.

The Southern Christian Advocate so well and so completely embodies our convictions in this matter that we give it to our readers:

"The Constitutional Convention has refused to incorporate the State colleges in our Constitution or to make their support mandatory, and leaves them in the hands of the Legislature. It is fairly and wisely done, gentlemen—or that, at least, in our judgment. It would have been an error to have tied us hard and fast to the present system of State education. No man can tell if our people can or should carry all of our State colleges for the next forty years. To have demanded it might have resulted in wreck of all. The Legislature can be governed by necessities as they arise. They should carry all the State schools—if possible—eliminating the free tuition injustice—or if the future proves it is impossible to preserve all, they can save some. We are satisfied that our people will commend the Convention. And for ourself, while we are interested in all the State colleges, and have particular attachment for two—one, our own alma mater—we do not hesitate to say 'Well done.' We would profoundly regret the closing of any of our State or other colleges. But let them live by their works—by the good they now do. We want, and our [illegible] want, the masses educated. That [illegible] first. Then, let higher education [illegible] many can obtain it."

SOME BOUNDARY LINES OF DISCUSSION.

Nearly a year has now elapsed since a secular paper, under a somewhat startling caption, denied to religious bodies the right to discuss and pass resolutions upon matters which, though affecting religious interests, could only be settled by legislation.

The passage of many months has allayed the flush of feeling which, under all the circumstances of time and place, the incident provoked. But the question itself, whether such discussions can be justified, whether the passage of such resolutions is right and proper, may in some minds still be open and unsettled. Inasmuch, therefore, as it has not lost its practical importance, and has not been adequately discussed, we propose in a single article to reopen the question and submit some thoughts which may aid in its solution. This we shall do with all seriousness, and with a real desire to get at the truth.

What limitations should religious bodies impose upon themselves in entertaining, discussing, and acting upon reports and resolutions which have to do with religious interests on one side with the action of civil authority on the other?

At the outset we may say that the right of discussing public matters which affect their interests and the right of protest against what they believe to be morally wrong has always been claimed by Baptists. Indeed, it would hardly be going too far to assert that on almost every page of their history for centuries appear the records of their protests against what they have believed to be wrong and unjust in civil government.

The earliest annals of our churches and associations, as well as the latest, contain resolutions or protests or petitions concerning matters pertaining to civil government on the one side and religious interests on the other. The first Baptist church in England of which we have clear knowledge presented a protest to Queen Elizabeth in 1575. It was very evident to the Lord Bishops that if the principles contained therein should get recognition, there would be "danger ahead." Two of the members of this church got their answer by being burned at the stake, and the rest by banishment. Almost single-handed, for two hundred years, Baptists fought the long, bitter, and weary battle for Religious Liberty. How did they finally prevail? By refusing to bring to light in open discussion the principles for which they stood? No; by petitions, protests, discussions, they made the world know at last where they stood and why they stood there. It was thus that they gained allies; it was thus that they won their victory,—so far as it has been won, as yet,—for themselves and for others. Does any one believe that, without earnest, widespread discussion of questions which contained political elements, the priceless boon of Religious Liberty could ever have been secured?

And so it has been ever since that victory was won. Whenever there has seemed to be need for expression of opinion on such matters as we are now considering, our associations and conventions have never hesitated to voice their sentiments.

In that very able paper addressed "To the Baptists of North Carolina," by the Convention at its first meeting in 1830, certain objections to the new organization were stated and answered. The following sentences from that address seem to be to the point here. "It has been said that conventions similar to the present are devised to beget a connexion between Church and State. * * * Those who profess so much zeal for civil institutions * * remind us of the infidels in the Apostles' days, who endeavored to alarm the fears of the civil authorities by charging Christianity and its advocates with a design to subvert the ruling powers of the State."

In the minutes of the Convention of 1842 we find a report in which is discussed the "Free School System," which was just going into operation. The report was very commendatory, as it happened. But the right to commend involves the right to criticize.

At each session during the civil war elaborate reports on "The State of the Country" were presented by such men as Wingate, McDowell, and Skinner. Similar reports were presented and freely discussed in the Southern Baptist Convention and in many of the associations.

Nor do Baptists stand alone in this regard. Examination of the minutes of presbyteries, conferences, and councils, reveals the fact that in later years Baptists have been comparatively temperate in insisting on their right to help in influencing legislation. Many religious bodies, both in and out of our State, have taken action in regard to Sunday mails, the running of trains on Sunday, the opening of Centennial and Columbian Expositions on Sunday, lottery laws, local option, high license, prohibition, etc.

Mistakes may have been made in some cases; but surely no one will doubt that in many instances good has been accomplished in the formation of sound public opinion.

But this long line of precedent, while it establishes a strong presumption in favor of a well nigh unquestioned custom, and while it puts the burden of proof on those who may object to it, is not sufficient to prove that it is right. It only proves that our fathers and most of our contemporaries have thought that it was.

Is it right in itself? We say, yes. When there are great moral principles involved, when there are deep and decided convictions, conscientiously held, "we cannot but speak." The compulsion is as imperative as that which moved the men of old who preferred to obey God rather than man. And the fact that in some cases relief can be given only by action of the civil powers, so far from limiting the right of expression, seems all the more to demand its exercise. The North Carolina Bill of Rights (Sec. 25) maintains that "the people have a right to assemble together to consult for their common good * * and to apply to the Legislature for redress of grievances." Nobody would ever for a moment claim that this was primarily intended to apply to religious bodies. But it certainly includes them.

It sometimes happens that questions which clearly involve ethical and religious elements are before the people. Sometimes religious interests are threatened. Sometimes important principles are in danger of being ignored. The only possible way to adjust such matters is by wise legislation. The only open and honorable way to secure any kind of legislation is for the people to make known their sentiments and wishes. And the best way, if not the only way, for Christian people, as such, to do this is through their regular organizations.

For them entirely to ignore the endangering of their interests is to be indifferent or cowardly. For them to seek relief, within constitutional limits, is in accordance with law, human and divine, and with common sense.

It should never be forgotten, however, that our conventions and associations are for distinctively religious purposes. Their objects are definite and are clearly set forth in their constitutions. When any of these seem to be imperilled, all reasonable measures should be used in defence. But everything that is not explicitly set forth or implicitly involved in their constitutions should be ruled out of our religious assemblies.

We are writing of questions which contain both religious and political elements. That any such question should get before our religious bodies, the religious side of it must be clear and well defined. To allow any question which is political and not religious to be discussed in our meetings would be more than wrong—it would be an outrage.

Scarcely less important than the matter, is the manner of discussion. It is hardly needful to remark that there should be no debate in any religious meeting which is not characterized by fair statement, guarded expression, proper shading, and freedom from all offensive personality.

We have expressed, and not without reasons, the opinion that religious bodies may properly discuss and act upon matters which have both religious and civil relations. But we must insist that in every case there should be so much prudence exercised that proper limits will not be overstepped. If we are to err at all in such cases—which is not necessary—it were better to err on the side of conservatism and caution.

MEETINGS AT ATLANTA.

Southern Baptists were well represented in the Southern metropolis last week. Two meetings and the Exposition brought them thither.

The first meeting was that of the Southern Baptist newspaper men, who organized permanently. There were present, brethren Folk of the Tennessee Baptist and Reflector, Cranfill of the Texas Baptist Standard, Thomas of the South Carolina Baptist Courier, VanNess of the Young People's Leader, Nashville, Frost of the Convention Teacher, Nashville, Bell of the Sunday-school Board, Nashville, Ward of the Georgia Christian Index, Armstrong of the Central Baptist, Missouri, Nash of the Texas Baptist Standard for Kentucky, Searcy of the Louisiana Baptist Chronicle, Hackett of the Mississippi Baptist Record, and Bailey of the North Carolina BIBLICAL RECORDER. The Religious Herald and Western Recorder had expressed themselves as favorable to the meeting, but were not represented.

A constitution was adopted. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, J. B. Cranfill; Vice-President, A. J. S. Thomas; Secretary, E. E. Folk; Treasurer, J. W. Bailey. It was voted to hold the next meeting in Florida in February.

This meeting proved very beneficial. It was a great pleasure to make the acquaintance of our co-laborers. We are sure that harmony and good feeling will be promoted by the coming together of the brethren year after year. To Bro. Folk, more than any one else, the success of this meeting is due.

The evening of the same day (Nov. 21st) the meeting to organize the Southern Baptist Young People's Union occurred. There were present 360 delegates from the churches, sent in response to the call of the committee of brethren who had the matter in hand. North Carolina was represented by delegates from Raleigh, Charlotte, Asheville and, we believe, Wilmington.

Every other Southern State was represented in the audience, but the brethren from Maryland, Texas and Missouri did not take part.

The meeting was a success. An admirable constitution was adopted, and the movement sent forward with full swing. The officers of this meeting were: Rev. L. O. Dawson of Alabama, President; W. W. Gaines of Georgia, Secretary; J. W. Bailey of North Carolina, First Vice-President; J. W. Wills of Georgia, Second Vice President. The next meeting will be held at Chattanooga on the day before the meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention, when the board of managers will be chosen and the permanent plans of working established. In the meantime it is hoped that the work of organizing the young people in the churches will go on. It is expected that there will be one thousand representatives at Chattanooga.

This organization is one that every Southern Baptist church can endorse. Its object is to further the work along the lines of our Convention under the authority of the churches.

NEWS NOTES

....There are 243 students registered at Wake Forest College.

....Subscriptions for the new Presbyterian church of this city have reached twelve thousand dollars.

....Prof. C. E. Brewer has just returned from Atlanta with a party of students who attended the Exposition.

....A large number of conversions were reported at the recent meeting held by Rev. W. P. Fife in Winston, N. C.

....We were glad to see in our office last week Bro. W. C. Newman, sheriff of Polk county, who spent a day or two in the city on official business.

....Many people are discontented, not that they have not enough for comfort and happiness, but because they think there are others who have more they have.

....Prof. H. M. Hamill, the national Sunday-school worker, filled the pulpit of the First Baptist church in Wilmington last Sunday. Bro. Oliver, the pastor, is engaged in a series of meetings in Mt. Airy, N. C.

....Rev. T. B. Hill will deliver an address at Apex on the evening on the 28th inst. on "The Claims of the Young People." The collection will be for the Thomasville Orphanage.

....Rev. W. R. Gwaltney spoke at Wake Forest Sunday on the extent and influence of the State Mission work on the growth of the denomination in North Carolina. His allusion to Dr. Durham was eminently just, tender and affecting.

....Prof. Geo. W. Smith was installed President of Colgate University Nov. 14. The principal address was made by Daniel C. Gilman, President of John Hopkins University. This was followed by other appropriate and interesting exercises.

....We commend the resolution of Mr. Moody to put a good book in the hands of every prisoner in the United States. Up to this time, North Carolina has received only twenty-five books, while some other States have received hundreds and some thousands of the books.

....Prof. W. L. Carmichael of Brevard, N. C., passed through the city last week on his way to his old home in Franklin county, where he goes to move his mother to Brevard. He is not now teaching, but has engaged in the mercantile business, and we are glad to hear of his success in this new enterprise.

....Bro. A. Johnson, editor of Charity and Children looked in upon us while in Raleigh in the interest of his paper last week. He has made a vigorous canvas for his paper and for the Orphanage generally during the meetings of our Associations, and we are glad to hear has largely increased his list of subscribers.

....I am grieved indeed to hear of the death of Dr. Durham. Our brethren have lost a faithful, true man, whose place it will be hard to fill. North Carolina pastors should rally now to the work of State Missions. May every one heed your earnest, timely call in this paper.—F. C. H. Curtis, Windy Hill, S. C., Nov. 21.

....The Cape Fear and Brunswick county Associations united this year, forming a strong Association of fifty six churches. We commend this action on the part of our brethren. In this section, where roads are level, and facilities for traveling abundant, we have much to gain by having fewer and stronger associations.

....Dr. I. R. Branham, one of the best known ministers in the State of Georgia, died on the 14th inst., at the home of his daughter near Atlanta. He had just reached his three score and ten mile-post. He had achieved distinction both as preacher and editor, enjoying to the day of his death the affection and esteem of his brethren.

....Bro. Hartwell Scarborough, son of Hon. J. C. Scarborough, State Supt. of Schools, was accidently shot by a negro boy who was out hunting with him last week. Bro. Scarborough stood in dangerous distance to the gun; light shot, and a kind Providence prevented serious consequence. We are glad to learn our young friend is doing well, and we hope he will be out in a short time.

....Bro. J. H. Lewellyn wishes us to acknowledge his gratitude to Booneville, Dobson, and White Plains churches for the substantial aid given him in his weak and disabled condition. Bro. Lewellyn was once strong and vigorous, and one of the most zealous and powerful preachers in all that section. Now that his work is over, his brethren will feel it a privilege to sustain him while he awaits his Master's call to come up higher.

....This week the pastors of our churches and a large number of the foremost laymen of the State will receive a letter from Bro. J. C. Scarborough, the President of the Board of Missions and Sunday schools, asking that a special effort be made for State Missions. We trust the action of these good brethren may be prompt and the contributions liberal. Let us go to the Convention with the Board clear of debt and the missionaries paid off for their year's faithful work.

....Some brethren are greatly distressed on account of the great amount of vicious and trashy literature which they imagine is being scattered broadcast in the land. In the first place we have no thought that there is half as much of this vicious literature as the exclamations of these brethren would indicate. And in the second place, the thing that we Baptists have to mourn over is that so many of our people read nothing rather than that they will read unwholesome stuff.

....We see that Rev. J. D. Clark, a Baptist preacher, has joined the sanctified ones, and will hereafter teach men so. We want to suggest to our brother, as we take leave of him, that he preach from the words of our Saviour when he told his disciples to "follow not after them." It has always been so, and always will be, that the over-enthusiastic, the credulous and feeble-minded kind, will be the ready prey of the mendacious "mind reader," the "faith-cure" humbug, and the "sanctified" fraud.

....Rev. J. S. Hardaway made us a pleasant call last week. He brought us a cheerful message about the brethren generally in the Flat River Association, and particularly of his own brethren in Oxford. The new church, which will be one of the handsomest in the State, is now approaching completion. Bro. Hobgood's school was never so good as now, and the business men are busy and hopeful. Wonder if '96 would not be a good year for the Convention to see Oxford? The Convention has not met with this church since 1849.

....Dr. J. B. Richardson wrote as follows on Thanksgiving, but failed to reach us in time for insertion under the heading, "Thanksgiving Thoughts," on the first page: "I am just home from a two weeks' tramp, too late to answer your inquiries about Thanksgiving. I favor every day as the Day of Thanksgiving—not a national, for such days always divide the praise with the Devil: he and man's stomach get the better portion. Yea, I believe in practice our national Thanksgiving is far more of an insult to a merciful God than praise."

....We note with sorrow what would seem to be the untimely death of Bro. W. T. Hampton of this city. As a worker and business man he was energetic, capable and straightforward. He was a member of the First Baptist church of Wilmington, joining there by letter from the First Raleigh Baptist church. For a few months this year he was on the editorial staff of the N. C. Farmer, but circumstances compelled him to discontinue its publication. At the time of his sudden attack of fatal illness, which continued ten days, he was engaged in his business as a printer, in connection with Mr. Jas. H. Ennis of this city. Bro. Hampton was an excellent young man, and highly esteemed.

....We take the following from an exceptionally fine and just article on the life work of Bro. Durham, which appears in the Baptist (S. C.) Courier of last week: "We extend our sincere sympathy to our North Carolina brethren in this common loss, felt most keenly by them, and call on them to bear in mind and to heed his final appeal, perhaps the last words he wrote in behalf of State Missions, published last week in the BIBLICAL RECORDER. Before these words had been read by many of his brethren his lips were sealed and his pen forever stilled. But the work he loved and to which he gave his life will go on, and his works will follow on after him. We believe that this message, this last message from his burdened heart, will be heeded, and the money will be raised and the debt will be paid. Few of us realize the burdens that our mission secretaries have to bear. The anxious thought, the perplexities, the wear and tear—it is not strange that they sometimes fall in the work, with pen in hand, or while speaking to the people, pleading for the cause dear to their

....As we go to press, we hear the first response to the special appeal for State Missions. Bro. W. A. Dunn of Scotland Neck writes: "A collection was taken for State Missions Sunday, and the amount was near one hundred dollars."

....It is with peculiar sadness that we hear of the death of Bro. J. S. Mitchell of Wilmington, N. C. A few years ago we sat by him in the class room. Only a little while he worked and toiled, and he, too, is gone to join the throng of the redeemed. He was forty years old. He leaves a wife and five children. May the God of all grace provide for them and keep them.

....Dr. T. S. Dunaway was re elected moderator of the General Association of Virginia in session at Petersburg. Dr. W. W. Landrum preached the introductory sermon. Norvell Ryland, treasurer, read his annual report as follows: State missions, $10 706 84; Sunday school and Bible Board, $4 643 37; Education Board, $4 236; Foreign Mission Board, $23 313 78; Home Mission Board Southern Baptist Convention, $9 610, 19; Ministers' Relief Fund, $2 963 40; Orphanage, $12 365 38; total for these objects collected during the year, $67,849 77 Including the receipts of the Ministerial Relief Board's invested funds and of the store of the Sunday school and Bible Board, the income of the body for the year is $71 221. The Education Board reported having seventeen young men at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary and forty four at Richmond College. The Board received during the year $8,236 90. It is $466 69 above debt. The Ministerial Relief Board aided fifty two beneficiaries. It has an invested fund of $30,000. The Association voted to raise $50 000 endowment for Richmond college which is going forward admirably under Prest. Boatwright. The State Mission report showed that "the number of baptisms exceeds the number heretofore reported annually, except for the years 1893 and 1894, and only thirty one less than 1894. The missionaries preached 6 839 sermons and occupied 205 stations. They baptized into the fellowship of their churches 1,245 persons and aided pastors in meetings in which 2,008 persons were converted. They organized twenty three Sunday schools and seven churches, and were engaged in building nineteen houses of worship and completed six." The receipts for the year ending October 31st, 1895, were $10,706 84, which, with the balance on hand November 1st, 1894 made available resources $11,419 57. The treasurer paid out on account of the board the past fiscal year $8,913 01, leaving a balance of $2 506 56 The Association voted against consolidation of the Bible and State Mission Boards. The annual report on the Orphanage showed that since the institution was founded in 1891, there has been collected and expended in necessary buildings $35,500 and has supported sixty five children three years; received during the year, $12,365 38 The meeting was very successful, the discussions were lively and interesting, but good feeling and desire for harmony prevailed.

ASSOCIATIONS.

ROBESON.

The thirteenth session of the Robeson Association met with the church at Raft Swamp last week. The weather was bad, though we had a good representation of the churches, and altogether we had a good session of the Association.

I do not think there is another Association in the State the members of which love their organization as do those Scotch Baptists of the Robeson.

At this church the Association was formed, and as Bro. Proctor, the Clerk, read the number and size of the churches then, and now to real ze what has come out of this little beginning, we could not doubt the favor and blessings of God upon the earnest efforts of these few brethren and the little churches they represented. Now the Association has forty three churches and a combined membership of nearly five thousand. The churches are all in the closest and sweetest unity with each other, and all united upon every feature of the work of our Convention.

The biggest contention that ever occurs in the Robeson Association is, what church can get it next year. I think at least a half dozen petitioned for it for 1896. Here Bro. A. R. Pittman was made Moderator; he is still its Moderator, and will be as long as he lives and will consent to serve his brethren in this capacity. He and Bro. Proctor are the pride of the Association, and neither of them seem to know it. Periodicals is the first on the program of the Robeson Association and it is not put first in order that it may be soon disposed of in order that something else may get before the body, but in the minds of the leading brethren of the Association this subject is second in importance to no discussion before the Association. I always love the Robesons, feeling under renewed obligations to the brethren for their cordial welcome and sympathy and for a large list of subscribers. The Recorder was never so strong or so highly appreciated in this section of the State as now.

The Lord was gracious to Bro. Proctor, inasmuch as he did not know how near Bro. Durham stood to the brink of the river at the hour when State Missions was being discussed. The effort of Bro. Proctor was a grand one, and the Robeson Association will raise six hundred dollars for this object during the present year.

Bro. Kesler's speech on Home Missions was clear, strong, and to the point, just as all of Bro. Kesler's speeches are. The Association seemed to get a fresh hold on this work as the facts about the missionaries, their labors and sacrifices were laid before them. We have been of the opinion that this department of our work has not at all times received its just share of consideration at our Associations, and so we were glad to hear it thus ably and effectively discussed.

If the Robeson Association had any pet interest, I should say it was Education. Well, really they ought to hold this interest dear; it has done, and is doing much for the Association and for the people of the county generally. There are more school-houses in Robeson county than can be found in the same area of territory in any other part of North Carolina. And so they have more boys at Wake Forest than almost any other county in the State. The churches are developing strong and intelligent laymen, sensible and cultured women, who recognize their proper place in church work, and are becoming a great power for good.

At the last session of the Association a Woman's Department, auxiliary to the work of the Association, was organized, and will hereafter meet in that capacity with the Association.

Brother J. A. Smith, the acknowledged champion of Foreign Missions, read a very able and suggestive report on this subject, which was vigorously discussed by Brother Smith and others present.

Bro. Mitchell did well here for the Board of Education. It could hardly be otherwise in this Association, where Wake Forest has so many living examples of what she does for preachers, teachers and business men of every sort.

Bro. R. A. Moore read an encouraging account of his work as colporter and missionary. There is no estimating the blessing to a community of a good man visiting the destitute, preaching to them, praying for them, and storing their minds with useful information.

COLUMBUS COUNTY.

At 10 o'clock Thursday, I am on my way to the Columbus County Association. Bro. J. A. Smith, who is never so happy as when doing good to others, assigns me a place in his buggy, and after riding twenty five miles, I find myself in front of a cheerful fire in the hospitable home of the "Bishop" of Fair Bluff and the country round about.

At 10 o'clock we are at the home of Bro. J. W. Powell, only half mile from Piny Forest church, where the Association is in session.

This is a small body, consisting of only a few churches, and they small ones. With our deference always to the wisdom of the brethren, yet we much question the advisability of having so many small Associations instead of a few large and enthusiastic bodies; especially so in this part of the State where the roads are level and the burden of travel so light. However, we felt greatly encouraged at the forward step taken by the Association. The discussions were spirited and good, and the churches in every instance undertook to do more work for the coming year.

Bro. Stringfield made a telling speech on Education, and we think got some substantial aid for his work.

Bro. Mitchell found a valuable helper in the person of Bro. T. J. Cobb, an old student of Wake Forest. He was elected Moderator of the Association, and performed the duties of his position well by the help of Bro Kelly, the efficient Clerk. Bro. Cobb is a steady goer and is doing a fine work in his churches and for the Association in general.

The introductory sermon was preached by Bro. J. F. Tuttle of Whiteville. We were not there to hear it, but other brethren told us it was one of Brother Tuttle's best efforts. There are few clearer and stronger preachers in the State. The empty sleeve may suggest where he stood among those who wore the gray. Just so, in the battle of his Master he is found at the front.

Bro. Johnson of the Orphanage, from the part he took in Bro. Powell's rations, must have been on his native heath. He made a good talk on the Orphanage, and we hope secured a good list of subscribers and a liberal collection.

The Recorder returns thanks to Brother and Sister Powell for the kind hospitality extended to a large number of brethren who took shelter in their bountiful and happy home.

Now I am in Lumberton, where on this night twelve months ago in company with the late Bro. Durham, I took supper with my good friend, Prof. Ducket. The same voice that welcomed me to his home last year, saddens me beyond expression as I learn from him for the first time that Bro. Durham is dead. J. C. C.

Last Notice.

Before another issue of the Recorder goes to its readers, the Committee on Entertainment will have closed their books. By the 25th of November we expect to assign the delegates to the Convention and the Y. P. B. U. to their homes; and those who fail to send their names by that time, we cannot promise to entertain. Brethren, please attend to this matter at once, don't retard the work of assignment by delay.

Delegates from the W. M. Societies will please promptly forward their names to Mrs. C. E. Holton, Pres't. W. M. S., Greensboro, N. C.

Remember that we want all names before the 25th of November.

Tributes to Dr. Durham.

Dear Recorder:—Let me add my tribute to the memory of the great man whom God has called from incessant toil to heavenly rest. I cannot realize that we are no more to see Dr. Durham in the gatherings of his brethren upon earth. How sadly we shall miss him! He was not only a man of strong convictions and intrepid courage, pressing on constantly toward a great achievement, but of a genial temperament which caused him to be admired and beloved by his brethren. He was my friend, ever true, and I have a sense of personal bereavement.

The strength of his life was given to his Master's work, and he died with the harness on. In the fulness of his prime, at the zenith of his power, he passed. The Lord's will be done. It was my privilege to spend a night with him at Littleton about the middle of July last. I was impressed with the fact that his mind was very much on spiritual things. He told me that more and more he was finding opportunity in his travels to talk to men whom he met on their souls' eternal interest, and related some precious experiences which he had recently enjoyed in that work. Thus was revealed to me the warm, spiritual feeling of the man who was more widely known as an untiring worker for the interests of the denomination that he so much loved. Above all else there was devotion to the Saviour that he loved, and who has called him to a higher and more blessed service.

And so, dear friend, farewell! and may thy example bestir us all to a greater zeal in the work of our Redeemer!

J. HARTWELL EDWARDS.

Nov. 18, 1895.

Dear Recorder:—I stood almost dazed, trying to force my mind to think what it meant when I received the telegram from Raleigh, "Bro. Durham died last night. Funeral Saturday." People on the hotel porch saw that there was something sad by the gloom that gathered on my face as I read it. I was asked what was the matter? "Dr. Durham is dead" was to all the sad enough reply. It would have been kinder if we had been prepared for the news, but the papers had led us to think that he was about recovered. Only a day or two before I had a letter from him about our State Mission work. He could always depend on Edenton church, he said, to come to his aid. I see now that even if he was sick, he still carried the burden of our work on his heart. But prepared or not prepared, there the invincible message was, "Bro. Durham died last night."

Only well enough for him. But for us—our Zion—only the pain of it, and the loss of it—the bitter loss. I am sure this is going to be the verdict—whatever his faults of temperament—whatever his mistakes of method. He was a man—a leader—in whose Christian character, in whose ability, in whose courage and entire devotion to Baptist interests, we all—from the mountains to the sea coast—had implicit faith.

I wish to say, too, stirred as I am by a sense of personal loss, that Dr. Durham was an encouraging friend to young preachers. I shall always treasure his words of private advice given me at my ordination in which he assisted. He was impressed with the great work before the Baptists of North Carolina and the need for consecrated young men to take part in the development of that work. And never can I forget how, after hearing the writer preach one night last May in the Methodist church in Gatesville at the conclusion of the Chowan Association, he impressively and affectionately pressed my arm, and turning his full and earnest gaze into my eyes, said feelingly, "John, John! That is the thing after all. Preach about and around Christ." I was awed and deeply touched by his manner. A conversation followed, in which he gave me his view of the temptation of Jesus—which, while agreeing with him, very materially improved the presentation of that matter in the sermon. He told me also in a conversation later in the day that his mind was constantly grappling with this text and that from it some day he was going to preach a sermon, Col. 1: 17, "By Him all things consist." He went on to say that the thought underneath the sermon was that consistency was harmony, and that since Christ was the consistency of all things, therefore in him was the harmony of all opposing elements. That Christ held things together and that in Him all clash and confusion would find peace.

Ah, well, I don't know whether Dr. Durham preached the sermon or not, but I do feel this—that it is all true as he said, "By Christ all things consist," and that the consistency and existence of our work in North Carolina never will depend upon human being. And I think this is true, too, that there is harmony somewhere in all this dark and tangled scene of loss, and sometime we will see it.

"When through patient toil we reach the land
Where tired feet with sandals loosed may rest,
When we can know and understand,
I think we then will say, God knew the best."

JNO. E. WHITE.

Edenton, Nov. 21, 1895.

Dear Recorder:—The death of Bro. Durham was a terrible shock. As it seemed to me, he was in the very midst of his usefulness, and more needed than at any other time of his life. How busy was his life, and what a work was his! In talking of his work, he said to me: "I haven't taken a day's rest, not even Christmas or Thanksgiving, in five years; but work from ten to fourteen hours for 365 days in a year. Sometimes when I receive letters from the brethren criticising my course, I wish I could get off to some retired place where I would not receive a letter or telegram for a month." He didn't say this in a spirit of complaint, for he never complained, but only spoke of it because I asked him about his work.

The question on every lip is: "Who can take his place?" We may not know, but God has the man ready. Let us ask his guidance. Meantime, will we not, as has been suggested, finish up the work he so gloriously began? To come to the convention out of debt would be the most fitting memorial to this faithful servant of God. We took collection last Sunday for State Missions. L. JOHNSON.

Bro. N. B. Broughton at Wilson.

Dear Recorder:—Bro. N. B. Broughton came to my assistance and preached eight days, to the delight of the struggling Baptists of Wilson. I use the word preached advisedly, since no other word in my vocabulary could convey a just conception of his clear and forceful presentation of gospel truths. Though his sermons were clothed in a beautiful and pure English dress, there was no studied effort to speak in the "enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit and in power." And God blessed the word to the quickening and strengthening of saints and conviction of sinners. There were five conversions, young men in the full strength of their manhood. The larger and richer fruits of our meeting are to be found in the more thorough consecration of Christians to the Master's service.

Prof. J. B. Brewer rendered timely aid in carrying forward the prime object for which our meetings were appointed.

A mortgage upon their church lot has long rested upon the hearts of our brethren and hindered their development in spiritual power. We resolved, after much prayer to God, to make an effort to settle the mortgage and a small debt on building, which amounted to $3 250. On last Monday night Bro. Broughton preached with his usual pathos and power, and then closed with a collection of $1,650 in cash and first-class subscriptions. We had real congregational singing after the result was announced, and the doxology was called for. Everybody made a "joyful noise unto the Lord," without the slightest fear of violating the laws of harmony.

In the midst of our rejoicing we remembered and wept heart tears over the great loss our denomination has sustained in the death of a great and good man. Durham was as good as he was great. His greatness consisted in a fearless use of his powers for the God of truth and right. We shall all miss him, and grieve after him; but a little while we shall hear him welcome us to rest, as he was wont, in other days, to exhort us to work. J. A. MUNDY.

Central Falls—Its Work, Necessities and Surroundings.

This is certainly an important mission point for the Baptists. Central Falls is a factory town of about three hundred inhabitants on Deep river in Randolph county. About the center of that line of factory towns, from Randleman to Ramseur, there are about 5,000 or 6,000 people living; new factories are going up, and the population continually increasing.

When I came to Deep river six years ago, Bro. G. L. Merrell, a seed-sower and foundation-layer, was preaching for us at this place. Later on, Bro. G. M. Webb, him full of gospel truth, preached for us awhile. He was a very troublesome man—i. e., he troubles the waters wherever he goes with converts to Christianity. At present, Bro. S. F. Conrad—with his zeal, strong points and well prepared sermons—preaches for us one Sunday night in each month with telling effect. Bro. J. D. Hackney, an arduous worker in the highways and hedges, has for the last two years done a good deal of pulpit and house to house work in our little town. We have a Sunday school numbering from forty to seventy five scholars; also an interesting weekly prayer meeting.

We have recently purchased a lot for thirty dollars, on which to build a house of worship. We have had the use of the school house near by in which to preach and hold our Sunday school up to the present. Oh! how we need a house.

The M. E. Church people have a small church here and are very weak numerically and financially. Different denominations are close around and in the country; their name is Legion; and if I am not very much mistaken in my observations, the various and conflicting doctrines and views set forth by the different religious persuasions have done no little harm in bringing the religion of Christ into disrepute, especially among the unsaved, and causing them to put a very low estimate on the greatest of all blessings. It is no uncommon thing here for persons to make several bright and loud professions of religion within a few years' time, and as often lapse into sin and great wickedness.

Although we have kind friends in our little town and surrounding country, together with good neighbors and genuine followers of our blessed Saviour, I write these lines to introduce Central Falls to the Baptists of the State, and especially to the Piedmont Association, of which we are now a portion. If the Lord spares my life a little while longer, you will hear from me again and again in behalf of this place through the Recorder, and in our Union and Associational meetings.

The fourteen Baptists who live here are nearly all poor—factory operatives. I don't suppose all of us together are worth two homesteads, and our sister churches around us are also very weak.

Randolph is by no means a Baptist county; therefore we shall have to get help from abroad mainly, if we get it from anywhere. We are, however, doing all that we possibly can in building material and subscriptions for our house. I feel unusually concerned for this place, and I believe every member of our little band is willing to give to the cause here as the Lord is prospering him, not the little, pitiful sum of one cent, but much more than that. We find several people about here who are Baptist inclined and would unite with us if we only had a house. The illiteracy of this place is alarming. Therefore a very large per cent. of our people are almost entirely dependent upon the pulpit for their religious instruction. I will give an example, which will serve to show the extent of our ignorance, our need of instruction, and how we can learn when we have a chance:

One of our Sunday school teachers had a class of twenty-five scholars, some of whom were grown persons and not one able to read or write. In less time than twelve months nine of that number were transferred to the Bible Class and are now reading the Scriptures for themselves. Two of that number have professed faith in Christ: one of these had no Bible in the home.

I could give many more interesting facts about our prayer-meeting and Sunday-school work if space would allow. But I must close by saying if any brother or friend will send us a contribution large or small, it will be very thankfully received and acknowledged through the Recorder, if desired. Send your contributions to the undersigned at Central Falls, N. C.

Meeting at Mt. Lebanon.

Dear Recorder:—On the second Sunday in November it rained all day. Pastor John A. Summey and myself went to church, but no one came. We went again on Monday at 10 a. m., and only a few were present. Bro. Leo W. Harris preached a sermon. On Tuesday, Bro. G. W. Henderson preached, and the Lord began his work. I never have been in a meeting in all my life when the Lord's presence was so greatly manifested to the people. The whole church went to work, and we had a glorious meeting, which I think will never be forgotten. The church is much revived, and eight persons were added by baptism.

This church has been persecuted above measure this year by its opposers. We have had a hard trial, but God has come to our relief and helped us.

Brethren Summey and M. S. Leach did some able preaching. The meeting closed on Friday at the river's side.

Bro. Summey has resigned the work here as pastor, thinking he can labor better for the Lord in a new field. The church dislike to give him up. He is a lovable brother, and may the Lord's blessing attend him wherever he may dwell or labor. He left on Saturday for Worthville, where he will hold a meeting of several days. He will be aided by Bro. Henry Sheets. May the Lord bless the meeting.

Yours in the work for the Master,
J. G. PARKER.

About the Union Meetings.

BY REV. M. L. KESLER.

Sometime ago you asked for free expression of opinion as to the advisability of having one set of questions to be discussed at all the Union Meetings over the State. I notice that very few replies have come in. I have been seeing for sometime that generally very little interest is taken in Union Meetings anyway. Let me give the plan of the Robeson Association.

At each meeting of the Association, the executive committee recommends the four principal objects of the Convention to be discussed at the four Union Meetings occurring during the year. So at each meeting one of these subjects is the principal subject for discussion. For example, at last Union Meeting, Foreign Missions was discussed, and all the churches are expected to contribute to Foreign Missions up to next fifth Sunday, and another object will be taken up, and so on through the year. The plan is not perfect in that it devotes the same amount of time to each of the four principal objects of the Convention. But it can be so arranged that the objects deserving the largest contributions would come at the time of the year when there is most money. The excellent feature of the plan is this, that it gives special point to the Union Meetings. We meet for something. We go up to each meeting carrying up and reporting the quarter's work, and at that meeting gather information and enthusiasm for the quarter just ahead.

The Orphanage is looked after on Thanksgiving day and by contributions from the Sunday schools, and aged ministers by a Christmas offering. The result has been that our Union Meetings have grown in interest, sometimes almost equal to an Association, and an enlarged missionary spirit, with a wonderful increase in contributions.

Of course, other questions are discussed, but they are secondary to the main object of the meeting.

Now, why could not the Board of Missions have some such program at the Convention? And then one short paragraph in the papers just before each Union Meeting would be all the printer's ink necessary. As it is now one issue of the papers is almost destroyed by the announcements of the most wearisome programs.

These practical and local questions can be discussed without any previously arranged programs. Many of them ought to have been shelved long ago. It is the rarest thing for a speaker to prepare before hand when he is appointed on them. They could better be gotten at and discussed by the use of a question box at each meeting. The truth is, we have very little use for any meeting that is not mainly and essentially missionary.

I don't think it would be wise for the Board or any Convention committee to go further than to arrange a missionary and educational program for the Union Meetings, but I do believe such a plan is practical and necessary.

How to Fill the Church.

BY J. E. J.

That quotation from Dr. J. W. Carter in last week's RECORDER reminds me of some things that I would like to say on the above subject.

It does seem that too many of our churches depend almost entirely upon the pastor to fill our houses of worship; and in their great desire to preach to large congregations, some pastors are tempted to preach sensational sermons, such as will "draw the crowds," whether there is much gospel in them or not.

Now there are five conditions, compliance with which will insure as a rule large congregations all the year round and at every service. But preaching on sensational subjects, picked up from the streets, police courts, or from newspapers, is not one of them. The preacher who depends on such preaching for congregations, will get them for a while; but somehow, such a preacher does not usually stay long at one place. He goes to a church, "cuts a figure" a year or two, and tells about the numbers that have to be turned away from his church for want of room; and the next thing you hear is, that he has resigned and gone some where else. For some reason sensational preaching does not wear long. People get tired of it, and the preacher finds it out.

To insure permanently good congregations, there must be

1. Good gospel preaching. It is not absolutely necessary for the preacher to be versed in ancient lore, or able to entertain with classic illustration to be most acceptable as a preacher. If he is filled with the Holy Ghost, and is able to give those who hear him something upon which the soul can feed and grow, the bill is filled so far as the preaching is concerned. What the people want is a live gospel from live preachers.

2. A good pastor. One who goes amongst his people, and the people generally, and knows their wants. I think it is true that "a house going preacher will make a church-going people." The people love to see their pastor in their homes; and when they expect the preacher in the pulpit on Sunday morning, to be the pastor who prayed with them in their homes, and spoke loving and helpful words to them, they are going if they can.

3. Good singing. That is to say, good congregational singing by the congregation, singing for the glory of God and not for the glory of the singer. When the heart sings with the lip, the singing will be inspiring and [illegible] even though it is not very artistically [illegible]. Solos by some singers on some occasions doubtless do good, but it is a question whether solo singing, as a rule, is very helpful to worship. Singing is a part of the worship in which the whole congregation should engage, and when they do it "heartily as unto the Lord," the people love to hear it.

4. A spiritual and active membership. Of course all churches claim that their membership is spiritual; but what is meant here is that the spirituality of the membership must be of such a high degree as to make people generally who attend the services feel the influence of it, and to realize when they meet for worship, that they are indeed in the house of God and among his people. I believe that the great majority of the very irreligious like such experience, and will go to the church where the presence of the Holy Spirit is felt. Then the membership must be active. They must work for souls during the week, speak to the people as they mingle with them, about their church services, and give not only polite but hearty invitations to attend them; and then to make them feel at home when they do attend. It would be a good thing if some of the members could stand about the church doors until services begin, and give real, hearty handshakes to the people as they come in, and most especially to strangers and such as are not in the habit of attending regularly, and to see that they are comfortably seated.

5. A comfortable room in which to worship. Those who are careless about going to church will not go to a church where the seats are bad, and where, in cold weather, they almost freeze during the services. Ventillation and light should also be well looked after. The exercise of some taste and judgment on the part of the membership in many of our churches, would add greatly to the appearance and comfort of their houses of worship and indirectly to the size of their congregations.

The church that meets these conditions will have no cause to complain of the size of its congregations.

A Call.

BY J. O. PARK.

Dear Recorder:—Methinks I hear the cries many generals of olden times, when the battle is raging and the bullets are flying, calling for men—men to rush forward amid shot and shell. But, Oh, what is that compared to God's call, when his voice comes with everlasting rings and with echoes that never cease, calling for men to put on the armor of Christ, not only to go to war, but to conquer, with our blessed Lord as our leader and our guide. Therefore, young men, do not be idle nor indifferent, but heed your Master's command and "be a hero in the strife;" but not as those of days gone by when men battled through blood for worldly fame and worldly honor. Take the stand that the venerable old Daniel did, when the king and even the world was against him; still he prayed with unshaken faith to our God, the God of all gods, and stood firm amid the severest trials, wearing the armor, the whole armor of his Master, the armor that Christ is so eagerly wishing, begging and pleading for us to wear. And Oh! now can we, when constrained by a higher power, boldly refuse to heed his call—the call of him who bled and died that we poor, fallen worms of the dust might through and by his blood come again to our Father and be saved!

Many are trying to follow their Master and do his will, but lack some things; they have not put on the whole armor of the Lord. The field is now ripe, the harvest is here; but we need and must have sickles of gospel truth, and men wearing the whole armor of God to gather the golden grain. We need not say in our daily prayers, "O Lord, for Christ's sake, give us more men," but should rather say, "for Christ's sake, constrain those that have heeded a part of thy holy Word, to heed all and go as thou hast commanded and proclaim that Christ died to save the world." Tell them that he died to save the whole world, and not the rich and the fortunate, and those who dwell in towns and cities alone; for some seem to think the rich and the poor are different classes in the sight of the Lord, and that the country and the cities are different worlds. I would to God that all such distinctions were done away with, and that the followers of Christ would carry the gospel out among the highways and hedges, and proclaim it to rich and poor alike; then a great victory would be won for the Lord, and songs of triumph would go on throughout eternity.

I say, both to the old and to the young man, What is in your way? Have you not yet gotten the mote out of your eye? If you have, what is the matter? I appeal to you, in the name of the Lord, what is the matter? Have you not a call to go forward? does not the world say, "Come"? and does not God give the command to go? Therefore, "why stand ye here idle," are not men dying, is not hell enlarging? O, I would to my dear Redeemer that every young man would consider within himself, and ask the question to the Lord, "Is it me you mean to go, or some one else?" And I am made to believe that very often, and very often indeed, that the response would come back as calm and as sweet as heavenly music, and yet with tones as the muttering thunder. You are the man, go forward and rally for the cause of God, and and be one among many that are interested in the army of the Lord."

O, Lord, grant that the time may speedily come when the young men of to day will realize their calls as thou wouldst have them to; and may they go forward and upward, winning souls for thee, regardless of worldly honor or anything that pertains to self; but may they gird on the armor of true Christianhood and be soldiers at thy command, marching onward, waving the banner of eternal life over our native land.

YOUR LAST CHANCE!

Positively Limited to December 24th.

Never again will there be another Special Offer made on this great Standard Dictionary and Encyclopædia of the World's Knowledge. We fully intended to advance the price on October 31st, but thousands of people in all walks of life have requested an extension of time until Christmas. After careful consideration, we have decided to continue our Special Offer until the above date. This is done simply and only as a means of advertising this wonderful storehouse of information. We do not expect to make money by this offer, as the very low price on extremely liberal terms little more than pays for paper, printing and binding; but the tremendous amount of talk created will help to advertise this most modern and up-to-date home reference library. No advertisement can do the work justice; it is its own most eloquent advocate. Recently adopted by the schools of St. Louis, Mo., and many other cities, in preference to all other dictionaries and encyclopædias. It is equal to a college education.

FOR A CHRISTMAS GIFT NOTHING COULD BE BETTER.

Your pastor, teacher, friend, parents, or your children will appreciate this great work beyond expression. It will last a life time and always give satisfaction. No business or professional man, teacher, student, mechanic, housewife or any other person who wishes to keep abreast of the times, or who is interested in the laudable enterprise of self-education, can afford to allow this rare opportunity to pass without careful investigation. Understand, this great work embodies all the features of a complete Dictionary and a thorough Encyclopædia. The new and entirely up-to-the-times is now offered all readers of this paper at the rate of 7c. per day, in monthly payments of $2.00 each, until the sum of $16.80 is paid. This is but little more than one-third the regular price.

This greatest of all Dictionaries and Encyclopædias was edited by such world-renowned scholars as Dr. Robt. Hunter, A.M., F.C.S., Profs. Huxley, Morris, Herrtage, Estoclet, Williams, etc., assisted by scores of other specialists in various branches of knowledge.

Don't forget this special offer holds good only until Christmas Eve, at which time the price will be advanced to $42 to $70 per set, and absolutely no deviation from these prices will be made. It is not for sale in book stores, and can only be obtained from us or our authorized representatives.

Over $750,000 Required to Produce This Magnificent Self-Educator.

It is a Complete Dictionary of the English language. Every word is exhaustively treated as to its origin, history, development, etymology, pronunciation and various meanings.

It is a Thorough Encyclopædia of anatomy, botany, chemistry, zoology, geology, art, music, agriculture, physics, philosophy, mechanics, history, mythology, biblical knowledge, etc.

It is a Superb Library Book, substantially bound, printed from new plates, in large, clear type, on heavy white paper, and illustrated with thousands of new pictures made especially for this work.

It is better than all other dictionaries, because the latest edition of Worcester contains but 110,000 words and 2,136 pages; the latest Webster contains but 140,000 words and 2,011 pages; the Standard contains but a little over 200,000 words and 2,318 pages, and even The Century contains but 225,000 words, and sells for $60 to $100. Encyclopædias of various kinds sell for $60 to $200. This great ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY, containing 5,337 pages, over 3,000 illustrations, bound in four handsome volumes, has over 250,000 words, 50,000 encyclopædic subjects, and is the accepted authority of the English language.

Nine Opinions—Thousands More Equally Good.

The Encyclopædic Dictionaries ordered for use in the public schools are giving excellent satisfaction. After an exhaustive examination of all the leading dictionaries, yours was selected in preference to any other. As an unabridged dictionary, your work leaves nothing to be desired; and the profusion of encyclopædic matter, terse, yet comprehensive, covering thousands of important topics, saves many a long search through the more cumbersome encyclopædias.—Elmer E. Lacey, Chairman Course of Study Com., St. Louis Board of Education.

I have Webster, Worcester, and the Century, and for Encyclopædias I have the Britannica and Appletons. The Encyclopædic Dictionary is a magnificent substitute for all of them.—J. H. Atwood, Esq., Attorney-at-Law, Leavenworth, Kan.

It is the greatest time-saver among all my books of reference. There is no other work of many times its size and cost that can for a moment compare with it.—Rev. S. W. Miller, D. D., Saltsburg, Pa.

Matthew Tyson Yates, Missionary.

BY R. J. WILLINGHAM, D. D.

On Jan. 8th, 1819, there was born in Wake county, North Carolina, to William and Delilah Yates, a son, whose influence was to reach around the globe. Growing up in the midst of unpretentious surroundings, even in his youth he was known as one of more than ordinary promise. He professed religion at seventeen, and was baptized in October, 1836. It is said that while he was a young lad, Rev. Elias Dodson visited his father's house, and the boy Matthew met him at the front gate. While they were together hitching the horse, Brother Dodson asked the lad if he ever prayed. He gave a negative answer and said he did not know what to pray. Bro. Dodson said to him, "Pray, 'God be merciful to me, a sinner.'" Shortly after, the boy went aside in the forest, and kneeling down, began, praying that prayer which afterwards resulted in his conversion. After his conversion, he became very anxious for an education, selling a horse which his father had given him in order to go to school. His words to his father on the subject are familiar: "I will go to school if I have to make brick by moonlight to pay my way." Men who, when they "cannot find a way make one," soon find friends. People love to help those who help themselves. Determination, based on energy and perseverance, not only overcomes opposition but gathers strength and friends as it goes forward.

The humble, earnest youth was soon at Wake Forest, with the State Convention at his back. High honors were they thus conferring on the young man. Honorably did he receive their noble aid and in the future years paid back that honor to State and College ten thousand fold. Any person, State or College can well afford to educate a thousand men if only one is a Matthew Tyson Yates.

That merciful Providence which raised up friends to help educate him, also gave him a companion for life, who was to be a source of continued strength and light in her life of devotion and love. No one can estimate what a blessing came to him when September 27th, 1846, he married Miss Eliza Moring of Chatham county, N. C. A good wife is from the Lord, and no account of a man's life is perfect that leaves out the mighty factor which strengthens, encourages and helps him in every noble effort.

To give an idea of him as he appeared to others in his young manhood, we note that under date of April 30th, 1846, Rev. John B. White then of Wake Forest College, communicated the following to the Board of Foreign Missions:

"Mr. Yates is a few inches over six feet high, straight, broad-chested, and inclined to be spare, with eyes and hair black, an agreeable countenance, and, for his opportunity, an easy and dignified manner. He has been here about six years. In no study was he ever marked below 'good;' in most of them 'very good;' and, in a few, 'excellent'—these marks denoting our highest grades of scholarship. He has a very pleasant, full voice, and possesses, indeed, many elements of a forcible and commanding speaker. I think he has a well-balanced mind."

His attention was first directed to the mission work by reading the memoirs of Mrs. Judson. His soul was stirred within him and he would weep while plowing in the field or working with the trowel, as he considered the lost condition of those out of Christ and without knowledge of Him in heathen lands. At such times he would go in solitude and ask what God would have him to do. He was appointed as missionary Aug. 3d, 1846, and sailed for China March 15th, 1847, arriving at Shanghai September 19th, 1847. There, a stranger in a strange land, without ability to speak to the people, he set to work for his life's work. No books, no language, one word at a time, and yet Dr. Yates is said in after years to have become more fluent in the Shanghai dialect than any foreigner there. He knew how to labor and to wait. He had Scriptural patience, trusting and trying, watching and working.

Shanghai, where he was stationed, is a leading city of China, being about one thousand miles above Canton, where our first mission was opened. Here, in the midst of difficulties untold, he labored, winning the hearts of the natives and foreigners to himself, that he might win them to Christ. How can a man teach the God who is love, unless he himself is lovely? Fatal delusion if a man, harsh and repulsive himself, thinks he can drive men to Christ. Dr. Yates so won the hearts of men that he was appointed Vice-Consul, which place he filled temporarily when his voice had failed him so that he could not preach. Later, he was requested to take the office of "Consul General" at Shanghai upon the death of the superior officer, but his voice being now restored, he said:

"This I could not do without giving up my missionary work—my life-work. No office in the gift of the government, or of the people, could induce me to do that while I am able to preach and to translate. I resigned, therefore, the honor and the emolument."

He was a man of large heart, the money he secured while acting as Vice-Consul he gave to build a chapel in Shanghai, so much needed there, and the church building there to day is a monument to his liberality. Schools were supported by him and his wife.

While in North Carolina, his heart reached out to China. While in China he loved the work at home still. A poor, struggling young man in North Carolina was told that a friend would help him to go to college; for over a year he worked at Wake Forest before he found out the unknown benefactor was Dr. Yates, who wanted to help some young preacher at home. Over three years was this help conferred on this young man, very probably afterwards on others. The young man referred to is to day one of Richmond's leading pastors, strong, clear-headed, pious, an ardent lover of missions, a member of the Foreign Mission Board.

Shortly before Dr. Yates died, he gave one thousand dollars to Richmond College, to be used in helping young preachers. These are doubtless only a few instances of his liberality*. Who can know what such a man has done, what forces put into action? Only God and eternity can tell. A man is not great simply by the measurement of what he has accomplished in himself, but as under God he can get hundreds or thousands to serve and glorify his God. North Carolina is known as the missionary State, because of the number of her sons and daughters who have gone to mission lands. Much of this is doubtless due to M. T. Yates, but North Carolina has not been the only State quickened, the influence has gone through the whole Convention which sent him and reached to the ends of the earth.

Besides being intensely interested in the China Mission, Dr. Yates was deeply concerned for Japan, and it is doubtless due much to his exertions that the Southern Convention opened a mission there.

Not only did he rank high among those of his own denomination, but see what a Presbyterian brother wrote of him from China:

"Dr. Yates is physically, mentally, and morally at the head of the Protestant missionaries of this country, of whom there are several hundred."

I quote below some of the expressions of this mighty man of God. In early life while at school, in conversation with his special friend, Mr. Thompson, he asked for advice and said it appeared strange to him that his mind should be so strongly impressed with such thoughts, knowing that he had no suitable qualifications for such a high vocation, remarking, at the same time, he felt as though he would be willing to go to a land of heathenism to preach the gospel of Christ were he competent for such a work.

See how he wrote Sept. 19th, 1877, after thirty years of toil and conflict:

"This is the thirtieth anniversary of our arrival at Shanghai. At first, our way was in the dark; but every successive decade has shown marked progress in our work. To-day the missionary influence in China is a mighty power. The leaven of divine truth has been deposited in this mass of error and corruption, and its irresistible power is beginning to be seen and felt far and wide. The Bible has been translated into the literary or dead language of the whole country; and also rendered into the spoken language or dialects of many localities. Places of worship have been secured where multitudes come at the sound of the church bell to hear the Word of God. Churches of living witnesses have been established. Tens of thousands have been convinced of the truth of the gospel, who have not had the moral courage to make a public confession of their faith in Christ.

"Thirty years ago, when the prospect was so dark, and the darkness seemed so impenetrable, I would have compromised for what I now behold as my life work. Now my demand would be nothing less than a complete surrender. I am in dead earnest about this matter; for I fully realize that God is in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, and has committed unto us the Word of reconciliation, and that he has commanded us to make it known to all nations. I not only do not regret devoting my life to the mission work; but I rejoice that he counted me worthy to be his embassador to the greatest empire on the globe. Now my one desire is that he would give me wisdom to do his will and be a faithful steward. The Lord be praised for all his goodness and mercy to us in our hours of darkest affliction."

As to his methods of work he wrote:

"We aim at solid work, no clap trap, no sensational enterprises to write about... We believe thoroughly in schools; but for evangelizing agency, our reliance is on the law and the gospel. The Lord bless his own appointed way."

Dr. Yates' work was, to a large extent, that of preparation, opening up the way to others, laying great, broad foundations for future workers. He translated the New Testament into the Chinese language after learning the language and preparing it to convey the Scripture teachings.

His impress on the mission was very great. Dr. Bryan, who is now at the post where Dr. Yates labored, when recently in this country, was with the writer much, and delighted, when talking of the work and how it should be carried on, to refer to what Dr. Yates did or what Dr. Yates said.

His impress was great on the Mission Board at home. As this article was being written, the brother who had been on our Foreign Mission Board the longest and knew most of Dr. Yates, came in the room; the writer asked him, "What of Dr. Yates? You knew him well, what did you all think of him?" He answered, "Dr. Yates was regarded by the Board not only as a missionary, but as a statesman. If he had remained in this country, he would have attained to distinction in any of the walks of life. He was truly a great man, a fine specimen of a man. We entertained him at our home once while in this country, and he was a delight in the home circle as he was everywhere else. The Board looked upon him as foremost among our missionaries. And Mrs. Yates was equally deserving."

Over forty years, steady, reliable, earnest, strong, prayerful, at the front he stood. For a while voice gone, for a time paralyzed, through war, through pestilence, through trials, in life, in death, at the front.

On March 18th, 1886, with his hand at the work and his Master leading on, he was transferred in the service. To us who wait, down under the ocean's depths and over the mountain heights a message came, Yates dead! Back went the message from loving hearts: "Revelation 14: 13." How true in him, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, for their works do follow them."

His sainted wife worked on until March 24th, 1894, when she also fell asleep. Their work is done; ours is begun, and let us carry it forward in Christ's name,

"Till every nation, every tribe,
On this terrestrial ball,
To Him all majesty ascribe,
And crown Him Lord of all."

Thankfulness.

I thank Thee that so many saddening things
Thou art too tender, Lord, to let me know;
That Thou dost hide my future so that I
Can see no darkened way that I must go.

I thank Thee for the leafless trees that stand
With whispered promises in each bare bough;
And for the leaves and blossoms yet unblown,
This spring will bear, dear Lord, I thank Thee now.

I thank Thee that my thoughts go straight to Thee,
As sure as ever bird to hill top soared:
That Thou dost take my outstretched hand in Thine,
And listen while I say, "I thank Thee, Lord."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

"I see the crowd in Pilate's hall,
I mark their wrathful mein,
Their shouts of victory appal
With blasphemy between.
And of that shouting multitude,
I feel that I am one,
And in that din of voices rude,
I recognize my own.
Yet not less his blood avails
To chase away my sin,
And not the less the cross prevails,
To give me peace within."

*In answer to an inquiry as to what had been Dr. Yates' gifts to Wake Forest College, Prof. L. R. Mills, Nov. 19th, 1895, says: "About 1872, Dr. Yates gave $950 to the endowment of the College. In 1875, he gave for the same object $1,000. He gave the N. C. Baptist Students' Aid Fund $4,350 just before his death. I have had to give these amounts from memory, but I am confident they are correctly given."

NEWS SUMMARY.

North Carolina.

A new cotton mill is just completed in Concord. This is one of the best manufacturing towns in the State.——The cotton gin of W. B. Wilder, two miles from Raleigh was burned last week. Loss $3,000.——In Stokes county a brandy distillery caught on fire and a man and his two boys fatally burned.

In General.

The South Carolina Constitutional Convention will probably adjourn this week. Henry E. Holmes furniture dealer in Richmond, Va., has just failed. Liabilities, $20,000.——Cuban insurgents have threatened to destroy $30,000,000 of property belonging to Americans and in some cases have begun the work of destruction.——The alumni of the University of Virginia are forming local organizations for the purpose of raising money to rebuild the buildings lately destroyed by fire.——The gold reserve in the treasury was reduced last week to $82,000,000.——At a recent fire in Chicago several girls were fatally injured by jumping from windows.——Eugene V. Debs, the imprisoned labor leader, has been released from jail.——Geo. Harris, the original "Uncle Tom" in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," is eighty-four years old, and is living in a destitute condition in Lexington, Kentucky.

A new story, "The Temptation of Katharine Gray," from the pen of Mary Lowe Dickinson, and from the presses of the American Baptist Publication Society, will be on sale the twentieth of this month. By those who have read advance sheets the story is said to be a very powerful one, and to set forth with convincing force the need of principle in life. Mrs. Dickinson has just successfully conducted the Jubilee celebration of Elizabeth Cady Stanton in New York and is, in the woman's movement, one of the foremost women in the land.

The Inductive Series issued by the American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia, Pa., and the alternative Primary Series, have now been made permanent publications, with the addition of a Teachers' Edition for each. Those who have not examined these two series will do well to send to Philadelphia for samples of the issues for 1895.

The Baptist Teacher for December, in its holiday dress, is very attractive. The January number will introduce the new features for 1896, prominent among which is the missionary department, giving items from every field of the different Baptist organizations North and South; several competent persons have been employed to do this work in the most thorough manner. Pen pictures of Bible places, by Dr. Blackall, written during his tour to the Orient, is to be another interesting feature; and yet another is the suggestions to teachers with regard to the application of kindergarten methods in teaching the lessons to primary classes. Send to the American Baptist Publication Society, 1420 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, for a sample copy.

The Gate at Advance, N. C.

Dear Recorder:—We have no large number to report, as having been taken into the churches in this part of the vineyard. Are numbers always the surest and safest test of faithful work? If this were so, we should be a little inclined to be discouraged because of the small harvest. There seems to be a great anxiety on the part of some to get people into the church—the greater the number, the more we feel that we have done. Of course, we should rejoice when men find Jesus. It is right that we should labor earnestly to win souls to Christ, but in our earnestness to be successful in this part of the work, we should not be unmindful of the great need of the churches.

The greatest need of the churches to-day is a truly converted membership. The church's greatest foe is within its own doors, that fatal lead. There is scarcely a church in town or country, whose influence is not to some extent, at least hampered by it. There is no limit to the power of the gospel. Does the church fail in any particular in the great work for which it was established? Is there lack of unity—of liberality? Are calls made from the mission fields to which there is not the desired response? Do the walls of Satan remain untouched—unshaken, while they surround our very places of worship? The cause is traceable, in part, at least, to the unconverted members. Oh, that we all were lively stones in the temple of God! Did the church of the Acts, then fall hands will respond to the calls made, and upon the crumbled ruins of sin will be planted the flag of Christ.

God is blessing the efforts made in his name here. We feel strengthened and encouraged. There seems more of spiritual life in our membership, and they take a livelier interest in the work.

Bro. Henry Sheets did the preaching in the protracted meeting at this place. There was splendid interest to the very last. This is only a mission point, and the membership is weak. Two have been baptized and one received by letter since our meeting. We have no house of worship here. This is a great draw back. There is not much hope of any very great growth until a house shall have been built. The lot has been bought and paid for, and effort is being made to raise enough money to erect a house for this little band on their own lot. The Academy Hall will be fitted up and used during the present year, is being used now, and answers very well to preach in, but will not do to grow in.

[illegible] very hopeful point. A[illegible] railroad village. There is [illegible] Baptist sentiment here. Our [illegible] are largely attended, and the congregation growing. If the Baptists of North Carolina could see this place as we do, there would be a church here all ready to worship in within the next three or four months.

Since our meeting at Glenmoneville, in which we were aided by Bro. J. H. Rich, now at Wake Forest College, two have been baptized and one restored. The church was revived and is getting on nicely.

B. K. Mason.

Western Union, Eastern Association.

The Western Union of the Eastern Association will not meet with the church at Poplar Grove, Sampson county, on Friday before the fifth Sunday in December, 1895, as was announced at the Association, but will meet with the church at Concord, Duplin county, on Friday before the fifth Sunday in December, 1895.

PROGRAM.

Introductory sermon to be preached by Rev. C. F. Hopper.

First query: What are the qualifications of a gospel minister? To be opened by Rev. R. C. Sandling.

Second query: Are annual calls to the pastorate in accordance with the spirit of the gospel? To be opened by Rev. O. P. Meeks.

Third query: Is it expedient, in the present financial conditions, that the Association turn over the Sunday school work to a separate organization with advice to secure a suitable man to devote his entire time to the work? To be opened by Rev. W. L. Bilbro.

BAPTISMAL DISCUSSION—BENEFITS EXPECTED.

We—G. M. Webb, J. D. Hufham, R. L. Limrock and N. N. Hawkins—all ministers, met at the Carpenter's Schoolhouse on Friday night before the second Sunday in this month, and organized a Baptist church, where I have been preaching this year. Fifteen members in the organization I baptized last summer. Eight or ten will unite by letter at the next meeting. The name of the church is "Webb's Chapel."

This is missionary ground, and the State Board ought to help the people, as they want to build a house.

On Saturday, Dr. Hufham and a Lutheran preacher from Hickory discussed the subject of Baptism—the mode, the subject, and the effect of the ordinance. Everybody seemed to be pleased, and I think much good will come out of the discussion.

I shall continue to preach to them.

Yours G. M. Webb.

On Saturday, the 9th, Rev. R. C. Sandling tendered his resignation as pastor of Spring Vale church. On Sunday following he was unanimously recalled for the eighth year by the congregation of this church. He will accept the call. Mr. Sandling is an earnest minister and excellent pastor, which is attested by the esteem in which he is held by his congregations.—Sampson Democrat.

A Remarkable Offer.

TWO QUARTERS FOR THE PRICE OF ONE.

The American Baptist Publication Society will put its periodicals to any school, not now taking them, at an introductory price of one-half the regular rates. That is to say, if any such school will send us the full price for the quarter ending March 31, 1896, we will continue the subscription without further pay until June 30, 1896.

We desire also to call attention to the reduction in price of the Advanced Quarterly and Bible Lessons, and to the fact that, beginning with January, The Baptist Teacher will have a Missionary Department. Miss Mary E. Wright, of Georgia, will report for the Southern Baptist Convention, Rev. F. S. Dobbins, for the Missionary Union, and Rev. J. W. Weddell, for the Home Mission Society. A view will thus be given of all Baptist missions, Home and Foreign, North and South.

Send orders early to nearest branch house or Philadelphia.

Scarlet Fever Settled in the Back.

AN OPERATION WAS UNSUCCESSFULLY PERFORMED.

From the Evening News, Newark, N. J.

About eighteen years ago, when Mrs. Annie Dale, of 88 Bruce Street, was a bright, merry school girl, she was taken ill with scarlet fever. She recovered, but she was a very different girl from a physical standpoint. She was cured of the scarlet fever, but it left her with an affection of the back. As she grew older the pain seemed to increase. Her sufferings were intensified by her household duties, but she never complained, and with one hand pressed tightly to her back she did her work about her cozy home.

"I was fourteen years old when I was attacked with scarlet fever, and have now suffered with my back for eighteen years.

"Night and day I suffered. It really seemed as if I must succumb to the pain, and then to make matters worse, my head ached so badly that I could scarcely see, at times. Finally I went to St. Michael's Hospital, at the corner of High Street and Central Avenue, and there the surgeons performed a difficult operation on my back but it did no good; it was like everything else. I was told at the hospital to return for another operation, but the first had left me so weak I could not go back. Then again I had become discouraged and my three children needed my attention and care at home. The pain became harder to stand and my back was almost broken, it seemed. I thought I would never know what it would be like to be well again when I was told to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. With many doubts, a faint heart and an aching back I went to get the pills, and little dreaming that they would prove the elixir of a new life to me, I began to take them. Only a short time elapsed before I began to improve. Could it be possible that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were doing what everything else had failed to accomplish! I asked myself the question many times and before long I was enabled by my improved condition to answer the query with an emphatic 'Yes.' Now the pain of almost twenty years is cured by these Pink Pills in a few months. I have no pain of any kind now, but I have got some of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and while I do not think it will ever be necessary to use them again, I shall certainly never be without them in the house."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

"How My Religious Paper Helps Me."

The Standard, of Chicago, recently contained an article "How my Religious Newspaper helps me." It is made up of expressions from a number of brethren, in different sections of the country, of different ages, and in different positions. William R. Harper, President of the University of Chicago, says: "From my denominational papers I secure help of various kinds: (1), a knowledge of the progress being made all along the line; (2), information concerning men whom I know or with whose work I have been familiar; (3), inspiration in the feeling that there are thousands who have at heart the same work for which I am working; (4), suggestions of real value in reference to work and thought and life; (5), better understanding of the principles of my denomination, and a higher loyalty to these principles."

Joshua Levering, one of the most successful merchants in Baltimore, and President of the Board of Trustees of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, says: "I regard the denominational paper as a necessary adjunct to any Christian household. Its benefits are many. My own experience proves how attractive it is to the entire family, from the little ones, who await its coming on account of the interesting stories contained in it, to the heads of the household, who through it keep informed in denominational affairs, and are also built up and strengthened in their faith by the editorials and communications."

MARRIED.

BLACK—MARSH—On Nov. 20th, 1895, in Raleigh, N. C., at the home of Mr. G. W. Marsh, father of the bride, by Rev. Dr. W. S. Black, aided by Rev. Dr. J. W. Carter, Mr. William F. Black and Miss Katie W. Marsh.

DIED.

FINCH—In Newbern, N. C., on Nov. 15th, 1895, Alonzo J. Finch, youngest son of Rev. J. J. Finch, deceased. Mr. Finch was well known as an insurance man and at the time of his death was general manager of the State Mutual Insurance Company of Worcester, Mass.

COX—With a sad heart we chronicle the death of sister Elizabeth Cox, which occurred in the home of her daughter, Mrs. David Pritchard, Camden county, N. C., Sept. 26th, 1895, in her seventy-seventh year. She was a consistent member of North West Baptist church, Norfolk county, Virginia. She leaves behind four children and many grandchildren, who, I am glad to say, are trying to go where she has gone. She was loyal and true to her church and pastor. Many who loved and esteemed her attended her funeral to share with the sorrowing ones. This is our loss, but her gain. She can't come to us, but we can go to her. Lord help us to be faithful.

P. S. C. DAVIS.

BRYANT—Sister Candace Bryant, wife of Bro. J. Q. A. Bryant, departed this life Sept. 30th, 1895. She had been a member of Mt. Gilead church, Chatham county, for thirty years. She was a patient sufferer for several years, and finally died of cancer. As her pastor, I visited her several times during her illness. More than once she expressed herself as ready to go when the Master should call; indeed, her great desire was to depart and be with the Lord. She left a Christian husband and many friends to mourn their loss.

W. H. EDWARDS.

CARPENTER—Nancy Ann Carpenter was born Sept. 22d, 1879, and died at her father's home in East Durham, N. C., Nov. 11th, 1895, aged sixteen years, one month and nineteen days. Nannie gave herself to Jesus in 1891, when not quite twelve years of age, and united with New Bethel church, Wake county, and was baptized by Rev. G. W. Coppedge, who was at that time serving this church as pastor. "Nannie" (as she preferred to be called) lived her religion, and thereby commanded respect for her profession and herself. The parents, sisters, other relatives, and some friends, started with the body on Wednesday morning, 13th inst., from East Durham to the church's burial ground, at New Bethel, in Wake, where she wished to be buried. Here we found those who knew and loved her awaiting the remains, that they might pay their last tribute of regard to her memory. Quite a number were out, especially the members of the Sunday-school—"her Sunday-school." Her body was taken into the house of worship, the Scriptures read, "Sweet By-and-By" sung, and prayer offered, just as she requested should be done before she died. At the grave her Sunday-school and some members of her church sang, "There will be no good-bye in heaven." This was well performed, and the tears fell thick and fast from many eyes, but they were tears of joy, because none sorrowed but in hope of a reunion where no farewells are spoken. "The good die young," it has been said, but this gives a shorter time with earth's trials, and the longer time in heaven

O. C. HORTON.

Tributes of Respect.

Bro. James Isaac Byrum was born Sept. 17, 1815; and died at his home in Chowan county, Aug. 4, 1895, aged seventy nine years, ten months and seventeen days. He was married to Miss Elizabeth Forehand in February, 1839. He professed religion and joined the church at Ballard's Bridge in August, 1840, under the pastoral care of Rev. Wm. White, which profession he maintained until his death. His Christian life and godly walk was such a manifestation of religious enthusiasm that on Aug. 6, 1869, he was ordained as one of the deacons of the church worshiping at Ballard's Bridge, which office he filled as near to the teaching of the Bible as he could up to 1890, when his mind began to give way. He was a regular attendant on his church—was never absent unless providentially hindered. His mind gave way in November, 1890, which caused him to absent himself from the house of God he so much loved. His mental faculty still continued to give way, and from 1893 until his death he had to be cared for as though he were an infant. At the time of his death, he was the oldest member and deacon of this church; all had passed over the river waiting to welcome him to come up and join them above.

Bro. Byrum was not an educated man of the head, but of the heart, which is more preferable than the head. We can safely say that from the life and character of our deceased brother so far as we know that he is now resting in the arms of his Redeemer, who has said, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

We beseech the deacons and all of the members of this church to try and imitate the life of our deceased brother by a godly walk and an honest, upright life. Therefore,

Resolved, 1. That in the death of Bro. Byrum, the church has lost its oldest member and deacon, the widow a kind husband, the children an affectionate father, the neighborhood a kind and good neighbor, and the State and county a good citizen.

2. That while we deplore his loss to us, we submissively say, blessed be the name of the Lord.

3. That we extend to the mourning companion of his life and the children of their love the Christian sympathy of our sad and sorrowing hearts in their sad and sore bereavement, and may God give them joy for mourning the garment of peace for the spirit of happiness.

4. That the above death, life and resolutions be recorded on the church-book, a copy of the same be sent to the widow of our deceased brother, and also to to the BIBLICAL RECORDER, requesting its publication.

Racket Store.

The great cut price sale of ladies' fine capes and jackets is doing wonders in that department. Remember you pay no profit on these goods; we are closing the entire lot at exact cost to us. Don't miss this the greatest opportunity you ever had offered to buy elegant wraps cheap. We are closing out a lot of about 200 pairs ladies' genuine dongola button shoes in either plain or patent tip at 75c. a pair on our bargain shoe counter. Any pair in the lot would be cheap at $1.25. Elegant stock men's kid English ties at 98c. to $1.25; a few cases men's Alaska brogans, sizes 6 and 7, 75c. No use paying $1.50 for men's wool lined buckle Arctics when you can get the same goods at the Racket for $1.25. Men's rubber boots $2.50; the same in boys' at $1.75. Full line ladies', misses' and children's overshoes at 25 per cent. less than the regular price.

Just received from James G. Timely Warning.

The great success of the chocolate preparations of the house of Walter Baker & Co. (established in 1780) has led to the placing on the market many misleading and unscrupulous imitations of their name, labels, and wrappers. Walter Baker & Co. are the oldest and largest manufacturers of pure and high-grade Cocoas and Chocolates on this continent. No chemicals are used in their manufactures.

Consumers should ask for, and be sure that they get, the genuine Walter Baker & Co.'s goods.

The Home Circle.

A Thanksgiving Sentiment from Whittier.

Our common mother rests and sings
Like Ruth among her garnered sheaves;
Her lap is full of goodly things,
Her brow is bright with autumn leaves.

Oh, favors old, yet ever new!
Oh, blessings with the sunshine sent!
The bounty overruns our due,
The fulness shames our discontent.

We sing our eyes, the flowers bloom on,
We murmur, but the corn ears fill;
We choose to shadow, but the sun
That casts it shines behind us still.

Content.

All lands are fair to him who knows content,
All skies are sunny and all fields are green;
His dreamy mists with softest azure blent
The distant cloudlands tipped with silver sheen.

The wayside violet sheds her fragrance sweet,
For him the wildrose blushes all are spent;
Love's fairest gifts are poured about the feet

—Selected.

Cause For Thanksgiving.

"I don't feel no cause to be specially thankful. I ben prayin' for Jonas these seventy years an' ther ain't nothin' come on't yit, an' I don't expect nothin' ever will. The minister he said we wuz ter look at the conversions he'd been in the church in the last few months an' keep Thanksgivin' just on that account if none other, an' I ben er lookin' at 'em an' I can't seem to see nothin' but jes' Jonas. I wuz er hopin' he'd come inter the fold this time."

There was a long drawn sigh of complete discouragement and then silence, for her neighbor knew how faithfully Jonas had been labored with, and how meagre the results which had followed the most earnest prayers in his behalf.

"I don't wonder you feel so, an' yit, let patience have her perfect work," and she looked very woe begone over her advice.

"I do think Lizy Perkins is changed. She use't ter be sich er flighty, harum-scarum critter. She couldn't never set through er meetin' 'thout gittin inter er spell er giggli' that took out all their solemn'ty of everything. I sh'd think her mar'd be thankful of anything would settle her, fer she hain't been able ter do nothin' with 'er fer quite er spell."

The neighbor went away, but though Almira Stout was alone she had plenty of company. Thoughts went trooping through her brain till it seemed as if she must tie her head up lest it burst. The minister had said give thanks for those converted, and here she was forgetting all about them in her anxiety over the unconverted. Surely God had performed a wonder when He turned Lizy Perkins from the error of her ways and planted her feet among the people who seek peace. Everybody said it was a miracle, and predicted she wouldn't hold out; but here it was months since she had knelt at the altar, and she was still the same quiet, earnest Christian as when she declared her choice of the straight path and her determination to walk therein. Her mother was poor, her father was dead, and she could not give much toward the missionary work, or help much on the church expenses, or do anything that called for money, but Pastor Greene said, "If you do your part in joining the church and thus show that you are ready to work for Him, He will find something that you can do." And so the Sunday of Thanksgiving month she joined the church with several others who had been converted during the extra services of prayer held in the church.

"I 'presume Mis' Perkins won't hev no Thanksgivin'—that is ter say, nothin' ter speak on. I shouldn't wonder of they'd git ericmg on er chicken or so. Lizy's er dretful smart girl, of I dew say it. I wonder of they'd like a spice cake. I'll send 'em a pie, I guess. I dunno but I'd better send two pies. I don't 'spose they have many pies 'n things. I wish I could git 'em er turkey somehow."

That afternoon she spent with Mrs. Perkins. That night Jonas remarked on the festive odors in the house. He liked Thanksgiving days and Christmas time, for they had such good things to eat in connection with them. His wife said "Jonas was fond of good victuals," and he smiled every time she said it, and silently agreed with her.

Jonas spread himself out on the sofa with the cat curled up beside him. He always lay down to rest "just a minute" before going upstairs to bed, and his minute was always prolonged till the clock struck nine and Miry roused him, he declaring every time that he wouldn't ha' believed it was so late." He looked very comfortable, and Miry hated to say a word. She got her knitting and put her slippered feet on the hearth, purposely turning her chair so Jonas could see only half her face.

"Ye know, Jonas, Pastor Greene said last Sabbath day, we ought to give thanks with them who had recently been converted."

"Yes, I think so myself," said Jonas, wondering what had started Miry on that track.

"Wal, Mis' Perkinses' darter Lizy is one of them that's come inter the fold, an' I ben a thinkin' I'd go over and spend the day with her tomorrer, and help her give thanks."

Jonas stroked the cat so hard that her tail showed sparks in them.

"I seen Lizy there this afternoon, an' I told her I was goin' ter be no comp'ny ... have me come cos it's er ... Lizy, too any kind of er ... an she cried 'cause I ... I told her I was ... how I'd ben er prayin' fer you for twenty years an' you warn't no different, an' the minister said plain enough ter give thanks with some one what hed been converted, an' as they wuz my nearest neighbors, I wuz er goin' ter take over the dinner. Of course I shell leave enough here for you, an' I've made pies an' cake an' cracked up er lot er nuts, an' done everything jes as I would of we wuz goin' ter eat with comp'ny.

Jonas seemed to be trying to say something. He swallowed, he opened his mouth, and half rose as if he would tell his wife if he only could find the words to express himself. The cat meanwhile evidently thought his petting too emphatic and retired to the other end of the sofa where she curled herself up for an extended nap. Jonas gave up speaking, if such had been his intention, and settled back on the pillow after punching it on both sides.

"It seems 's if everything had ben planned out fer me puppose. Julia 'n her husband can't come, and Philena wrote she was goin' to her son's this year, and so I'm left without no comp'ny, so't I kan go jes's well's not."

There was a peculiar look on Jonas' face as he said: "Wal, I dunno's I've any objections."

In the morning Miry's heart smote her at the thought of leaving Jonas all alone to eat his Thanksgiving dinner, and she half wished she had asked Mrs. Perkins to come over instead of carrying the dinner to her, but she thought of the minister and what he had said about going to rejoice with the newly-converted and she hardened her heart and proceeded to fill her big six quart pail with pies and cakes, etc. She was nearly ready to go when the big side door swung open and she was smothered in somebody's arms, and furs tickled her nose, and a wet veil kissed her heartily, while somebody said, "I am so glad. After I got pa's letter I just had to come. I couldn't stay away from home when there was such good news. Mother, it's your prayers that have turned him, he said so, and I know it. What a power he'll be! Now we'll all belong together."

"Mercy me! Where'd you come from? You wrote you warn't er comin'!"

"But after pa's letter"—

"What letter?"

"Why, he wrote that he was going to join the church. He said he knew you'd been praying for him so long, and he thought it time your prayers were answered. He'd had it shown to him that God didn't answer any prayers that we could answer ourselves, and he felt it to be his duty to answer that prayer; he had been thinking and thinking, and he'd concluded that he believed just the same as you did, only he hadn't courage to say so. You know, ma, he always was a bashful man."

Jonas was shaking hands with Julia's husband, and Miry Stout was taking off her daughter's wraps with a curious twitching of the muscles around her mouth. She kissed her son-in-law and went to carry away the shawls, but she was gone a long time, and when she came back her face shone as if she had seen the Lord.

"Jonas, you step over to Mis' Perkinses and tell 'm Julia has come after all, an' will they come over here to dinner, and—and—I guess you might say 't I've got p'tic'lar cause fer rejoicin' in my own house."—Zion's Herald.

Don't Be Cowards.

Charlie Mann smashed a large pane of glass in a chemist's shop, and ran away at first; but he quickly thought: "Why am I running? It was an accident. Why not tell the truth?"

No sooner thought than done. Charlie was a brave boy. He told the whole truth; how the ball with which he was playing slipped out of his hand, how frightened he was, how sorry, too, at the mischief done, and how willing to pay, if he had the money.

Charlie did not have the money, but he could work; and to work he went at once in the very shop where he broke the glass. It took him a long time to pay for the large and expensive pane he had shattered; but when he was done he had endeared himself so much to the shop keeper by his fidelity and truthfulness that he could not hear of his going away, and after awhile Charlie became his partner.

"Ah, what a lucky day that was when I broke that window," he used to say.

"Charlie," his mother would respond, "what a lucky day it was when you were not afraid to tell the truth."

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

The following is but one of many testimonials, showing the great value of this emergency medicine: "One of my children had Croup. The case was attended by our physician, and was supposed to be well under control. One night I was startled by the child's hard breathing, and on going to it found it strangling. It had nearly ceased to breathe. Realizing that the child's alarming condition had become possible in spite of the medicines given, I reasoned that such remedies would be of no avail. Having part of a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house, I gave the child three doses, at short intervals, and anxiously awaited results. From the moment the Pectoral was given, the child's breathing grew easier, and, in a short time, she was sleeping quietly and breathing naturally. The child is alive and well to-day, and I do not hesitate to say that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved her life."—C. J. WOOLDRIDGE, Wortham, Tex.

The Recorder: Its Origin and Work.

BY THE LATE EDITOR OF THE RECORDER.

Naturally, one wishes to think and speak favorably of the dead. It would be pleasant, therefore, to say that the founders of our Convention saw from the beginning that a weekly newspaper would be a necessary part of the machinery by which their enterprises were to be pushed forward, and because of this prevision, established it at the earliest moment possible. But a tender regard for the truth compels me to state that they did not see the necessity in advance.

For a year or two after the Convention was organized, they had no thought nor intention of establishing a newspaper. The enemies of truth and righteousness were ahead of them in using the printing press to disseminate their own views, and oppose the progress of the new movement. The agents who first went out to organize the Baptist forces of the State for aggressive work in missions and benevolence, found their enemies ahead of them with books and pamphlets which misrepresented their purposes and their plans, and sought, with every weapon which fanatical ingenuity could devise, to hinder them in their work. They were at a disadvantage. The spoken word was soon forgotten; the printed page remained; the speech could travel but a little way; the printed matter went everywhere. At last the brethren found that they must have an organ of some sort, and at their request, November, 1832, Thomas Meredith, in the spring of 1833, sent out the Baptist Interpreter from Edenton. It was a monthly journal, and while it was edited with singular ability, the brethren soon found that it did not meet their wants or answer their purposes. After a year's trial the Convention, November, 1833, requested Mr. Meredith to establish a weekly paper at some point more accessible than Edenton. In answer to this request he removed to Newbern, and started the BIBLICAL RECORDER, at the close of 1834. In January, 1838, he transferred the RECORDER to Raleigh, where it has since been published. At once it infused a new spirit into every department of our denominational work. At the session for 1835, John Armstrong, chairman of the Committee on Periodicals, stated that during the year the BIBLICAL RECORDER had been "a powerful auxiliary to the benevolent efforts of the age," and added: "It admits of a doubt with your committee whether, as a convention, we could get along without the aid of a newspaper. We have no hesitation in saying that our success will be proportionate to the extent of its circulation. Your committee cannot say too much in praise of the able and successful manner in which the editor has conducted his paper."

At every session since, by reports of committees and public addresses, the body has borne similar testimony to the great value of the paper in promoting denominational unity, harmony and efficiency.

The RECORDER has had five editors. Others have occupied the editorial chair for brief seasons, but it is needless to consider them separately. Of the five whose successive administrations cover as many successive periods of denominational development, I shall now speak.

It was a stormy sea on which Meredith launched the RECORDER. The old faith which the Baptists had held through the ages was assailed at every point. The doctrines of grace which made Paul feel himself a debtor to all men and bore him on his missionary journeys through the eastern limits of the Roman Empire; which have carried Carey to British India and Judson to Burmah; which had borne such gracious fruits in all parts of the South during the great revival of 1801–3—these doctrines were denounced as armenianism, and it was sought to substitute for them a system of anti nomianism, which should be a cover for covetousness and spiritual idleness. From this point, as a base of operations, the whole policy of the Baptists, evangelistic, educational and benevolent, was assailed. Ministerial education was ridiculed and denounced. The application for the charter of Wake Forest College created such an outcry that it was secured only by the casting vote of the Speaker of the Senate. A member of the Legislature from one of the eastern counties was beaten in the next election, distinctly on the ground that he had voted for the charter, which, it was charged, was to vote for the union of Church and State.

Later, when Alexander Campbell was organizing his followers in Virginia, he made a tour through some of the eastern counties, seeking to draw the churches away from the old faith of our fathers, and created no little stir among them.

In these contests, and others of which there is not time now to speak, Meredith bore himself grandly, and amply justified the wisdom of the brethren in choosing him to the leadership of the denomination. When, in 1850, the pen dropped from his fingers forever, and his spirit entered into the rest that remaineth for the people of God, the battle had been won. The golden glory of complete triumph rested on the denominational lines throughout the State. The old faith had conquered. The Convention was no longer an experiment. The College was out of debt and was growing in popular favor. There was a female school of high grade and splendid equipment at Murfreesboro. There were also female schools of high character at Raleigh, Oxford, Rockford and other places. Yates was preaching the gospel in China, and the Raleigh Association was pledged to support him. All the town and village churches, and many of those in the country, had Sunday schools. The spirit of the churches was such as compelled the younger ministers to seek the best educational training which they could obtain before giving themselves to the active duties of their high calling. The policy enunciated by our fathers in 1830 had triumphed at every point. There had been failure nowhere. To this grand victory Meredith contributed no small portion. Meredith was mighty, mainly because of the newspaper which he controlled, and through whose columns he spoke.

After a brief interval from his death in 1850, Rev. J. J. James of Caswell county became editor, and a little later sole proprietor of the RECORDER. He had studied at Wake Forest College, and taken his degree from Columbian University, bringing to the duties of his office good business habits, a sound judgment, a cultivated taste, a large acquaintance among the Baptists of the State, and a considerable reputation as writer, teacher and preacher. The period of his administration may be called the "golden age" of the paper. It was successful as a financial venture, the Baptists of the State were, for the most part, pleased with its management, and the editor gained both reputation and influence from his labors.

During the whole of his administration the strength of the denomination, while not overlooking other departments of Christian endeavor, was directed mainly to the endowment of Wake Forest College, and the establishment of academies which should be feeders to the College. In 1857, after several years of trial, the endowment fund of $100,000 was completed, and the College was put beyond the risk of failure or embarrassment from ordinary causes. High schools were in successful operation at Reynoldson, in Gates county; Madison, in Rockingham county; Ashepole, in Robeson county; Holly Springs, in Wake county; Warsaw, in Duplin, and at other points, when the civil war broke out. Early in the spring of 1861, Mr. James sold the RECORDER to Rev. J. D. Hufham of Duplin county, who became sole editor and proprietor, and retired to his plantation.

The new administration witnessed the beginning and the dreadful closing of the most gigantic struggle of modern times. It is doubtful if the Baptists of the State have ever been more thoroughly alive and active than they were during those four years of anxious, sorrowful expectation and immeasurable suffering.

The churches sent their pastors to visit and preach to the boys in camp. Missionaries and colporters ministered regularly to the spiritual needs of the soldiers in camp, on the march and in the hospital. Great revivals followed these labors and thousands were converted to the faith of the gospel. These things stirred the hearts of the people at home and multitudes of the saved were brought into the fellowship of the churches. Shut out from the literature of the world, the Baptists, with the other Christian people of the South, were very active in their efforts to provide religious reading for the soldiers and books for the Sunday schools at home. In all this blessed work the RECORDER had a large share. It was the only religious newspaper in the South which did not suspend at all during the struggle. It went regularly as a messenger of comfort and hope to the homes, and the fireside, and thousands of copies were sent to the soldiers in the field.

For a few months after the close of the war the publication was necessarily interrupted, but promptly resumed on the opening of the mails. It gave no uncertain sound. It called on the Baptists of the State, stunned and dazed by the wreck of their estates, their homes and their hopes, to rally and reorganize their denominational work at every point. It was a dreadful time. Wake Forest College had lost its endowment, and the buildings and grounds were in a woful state of dilapidation. The Institute at Murfreesboro was loaded down with debt. Efforts in behalf of missions, except the work among the soldiers, had been suspended for four years. But with a faith and courage that were truly heroic the Baptists of the State entered upon the task of reorganizing and resuming their work all along the line. We look back to this stormy period in our history and thank God for the man he had given us with the sublime faith and heroic spirit, who, standing amid our ruined fortunes and desolated homes, could sound the bugle notes of hope for his people and his State. We are more and more convinced as we read the history of God's people that he calls and endows men for the times and the seasons through which they are to pass. At this time when all seemed lost, the man of boundless hope, undaunted courage and loving heart, in warmest sympathy for his brethren and his State, stood at the helm, and pointing to better days and better things for God and humanity, cheered the scattered churches onward in the work of reorganization. By nature and grace he was the man for the hour, and to him as their leader the Baptists of North Carolina owe a debt of gratitude that is lovingly recognized by every worthy member of our churches. To write his life would be to write twenty five years of Baptist history in North Carolina.

Considerable progress had been made when, in 1867, the RECORDER passed into the hands of Mr. J. H. Mills, who for more than ten years had been successfully conducting a female college at Oxford.

Under his management the paper gained rapidly in popular favor. When, in 1878, he retired from the editorship to establish the Orphan Asylum at Oxford, a new and greatly needed enterprise in the State, most gratifying progress had been made in the work of rehabilitation.

Many improvements at Wake Forest College had been made, and the effort to raise a new endowment had been so far successful as to show what could be done. In missions, in Sunday schools and in ministerial education the blessing of the Lord had rested on the labors and sacrifices of his people.

The present administration began July, 1875. It has been the longest but one in the history of the paper.* It has had to discuss a great many critical and exciting questions, but in every instance it has spoken the sentiments of the people, and the people have nobly stood by it. In no other period has the denomination of North Carolina grown so rapidly in numbers and efficiency. At least 150 000 of the white people of the State are members of our churches, while the colored churches have a membership of more than 100,000. No other Southern State has so large a number of laborers among the heathen. The Baptists of North Carolina have in China, Africa and Mexico thirty-two missionaries. The unification of the work of State Missions is now complete and the District Associations are working together through the Convention. The number of gifted and consecrated young men entering the ministry is steadily increasing. The Orphanage, the youngest of our enterprises, has been successful from the start, and its capacity is enlarging year by year. Murfreesboro, the oldest and best equipped of our female seminaries, is free from debt, and is enjoying a liberal patronage, as are other female schools. Wake Forest College, with an invested endowment fund of $175,000, a complete equipment in the way of buildings, apparatus, &c., and an annual enrollment of more than 200 students, is the leading college of the State. All this after sixty years of toil and sacrifice. Truly, "the Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad." "Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in the church by Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen."

As to the place which the RECORDER has had in all this glorious work I do not wish to be misunderstood. It has simply been a helper; a very efficient helper, but only a helper. I repeat the words of John Armstrong, written and adopted by the Convention fifty-five years ago: "The BIBLICAL RECORDER has been a powerful auxiliary to the benevolent efforts of the age. It admits of a doubt with your committee whether, as a Convention, we could now get along without a weekly newspaper. We have no hesitation in saying that our success will be proportionate to the extent of its circulation."

*This article was written in 1890. The late editor controlled the RECORDER about twenty years, which is the longest term any editor has served the Convention.

The soldiers of Garibaldi were once on the point of mutiny. They sent him a message detailing their losses and helplessness. "What shall we have if we follow you farther?"

The answer was: "More hunger, cold, thirst, wounds; more of you will fall in battle; many will never see your homes again." But the hero's eyes gleamed with hope.

The brave men sprang up: "We are the men; lead us on."

Shall we not so speak to the Captain of our salvation: "We are the men; lead us on." That is missionary heroism.

The world sits at the feet of Christ,
Unknowing, blind and unconsoled;
It shall yet touch his garment's fold,
And feel the heavenly Alchemist.
Transform its very dust to gold.

BY REV. W. R. GWALTNEY, D. D.

First. What is their duty to higher education? They must build academies, endow and equip their high schools and colleges. They must see to it that higher education is not controlled by the State. Christian people must in every way encourage and foster Christian education. While giving the gospel to the people and building up churches, they must build and endow schools, and educate the young under strong Christian influence.

Said one of the greatest educators of the country, "A Christian college is an institution established to promote the kingdom of Christ by training young men's (or women's) highest powers—intellectual, social, and religious—for the service of Christ in the church or the State. That is not a Christian college in which Christianity is merely tacit and nominal. That only is a Christian college in which Christianity is the confessed and formative principle of the whole organization in method and life." Now such an education cannot be given by the State without violating the fundamental ideas of religious freedom.

The theory of our government disavows the union of Church and State, therefore the State has no right to undertake to touch religion. This would be to overlap her jurisdiction. Says another distinguished teacher: "The State has no right to invade the empire of the inner life, or to sceptre conscience and faith. The door to the domain of conscience is forever barred against the State by the constitution."

A distinguished Presbyterian divine in Brooklyn, N. Y., has said: "The all pervading principle of our American constitution is that the State as such has nothing to do with religion beyond affording to the people protection in the enjoyment of their religion, and that, too, without discrimination among them. It is difficult to see how a State established upon the principle, and for reasons of State policy conducting a school system at public expense, can make that system the instrument of religious instruction or worship in any form. It manifestly cannot do so without contradicting the fundamental law of its own religious life."

Christians should zealously guard against higher education going under State control; because Christian people must have regard to the organic law of the State and to all the underlying principles of religious freedom, and the entire separation of State and Church.

They must keep Christian education out of the hands of the State because the State cannot teach a definite religion, not even the Christian religion, without violation of the constitution.

They must keep it out of the hands of the State, because the government is in the hands of political parties to make and to unmake, to build up and to tear down, as the partisan spirit may move those in power. Some of us remember when our State University had to close her doors when one political party was turned out and another one came into power. If there ever was a time when Christian people should rally to their own institutions, endow and patronize them, it is now—in the day of little politicians, when nearly all are for place and for power and so few for country, when party spirit is the living, moving power, and patriotism is dead. Never before were Christian people so loudly called upon to educate in schools distinctly religious. Our institutions are not only the hope of the churches but of the State:—they are furnishing more teachers for the public schools and academies than are furnished by the State institutions. Five years ago there were in the United States 365 colleges and universities; 278 of these were Christian colleges and universities. In these 365 schools were 65,000 students; of these, 50,000 were in the Christian institutions. Most of the higher education of the country is given in schools distinctly religious and without any cost to the State.

Christian people of North Carolina, we must guard and foster the God given work. The State cannot do it. Give it to the State, and you give away the handmaid of religion, the best interest of the church, and the only safeguard of the State.

Secondly. What is the duty of the Christian people of North Carolina to common school education? In every proper way they should exert their influence and use every lawful means to make the free schools better. They should petition the Legislature to heed the mandate of the constitution and provide for a four-months school in each year. If they were to call for a six-months school every year, they would act more like Christian patriots. For general education, for the primary education of all the children of the commonwealth, the State must provide. The Christian people cannot do this. It is for the protection of the State and not for the benefit of the children. It is the duty of the State to furnish the means to qualify all for citizenship. No government is safe in the hands of ignorant voters.

Government must educate all, not for the benefit of the recipient, but for its own protection. Its perpetuity depends upon it. A government of the people, for the people, and by the people, must see to it that the people be made capable of self government. To do this, it must educate the many and not the few. A government, during a widespread famine, might have to furnish food for the starving citizens, but as soon as they became able to furnish themselves, the aid should be withdrawn, and at no time should the government feed them on rich dainties.

Christian people, who are trying to reach the masses with the gospel, save them from sin, lift them up, and make of them good and honest citizens, should lift their voices trumpet like in behalf of a better system of free-schools. Their philanthropy, their patriotism, and their religion demand such faithfulness.

In North Carolina the average number of days in the year that each pupil attends school is thirty six (Harper's Weekly). This is the lowest of any State in the Union by 8.1 days, Alabama being 44 1. It is mockery to talk of love of country while thousands, yea, tens of thousands of poor children in the State can't have four months in twelve to attend school and the average pay of the teacher is less than twenty four dollars per month. Short schools and poor teachers to prepare a people for holding in their hands the reins of government!

Bishop McTyeire says: "Of the over six millions of illiterates who disgrace and threaten any country, a very large proportion of them are in those Southern States that are inviting their citizens to free university education. It sounds well to say "Our University is open to the poor as well as to the rich. The farmer and the mechanic can educate his son there on the same terms with the millionaire." Look at this a moment. The farmer wants his son to chop out the cotton and help gather in the crop. The mechanic wants his son in the shop. Offer to them a common school within reach nine or ten months in the year, and you offer them what they want and what they can accept. Moreover, could these boys be spared for two or three years from the plow, the anvil, the work bench, &c., their parents cannot afford the expense of the board, travel, books, and suitable outfit for the University. It is mocking them to say, "It is open and free."

A patriotic Christian people should feel that if all are to be taxed to educate, that it should be to educate the whole people—to stimulate and lift all up to the capacity for self-government—for the safety of all and not for the benefit of a few.

To tax the many to favor a few is wrong in principle, and it brings the State into competition with many of its best citizens—in fact, it is the government in direct conflict with interests dearer to them than life itself. This cannot be for the advancement of the educational interests of a State. The State with its enticing offers, yea, I may say, with a drag-net in competition with its sacrificing, loyal citizens. Who that believes in Christian education does not tremble as he tries to forecast the future!

This apprehension is felt by Christian people in other Southern States. The writer spent last August in another State and attended a large Association, and listened to the discussion on education. The president of one of the Christian colleges of that State spoke of the illiteracy of the thousands, and of the large appropriations made to State institutions, and that by such policy his and all the other Christian colleges were endangered, and that the time had come when Christian people should protest. And from a State south of that, there was an editor of a religious paper present, and he said that in his State the same difficulties confronted them, and that before them there was a big struggle and a struggle to the end. Christian people shrink from any manner of contention, but their loyalty to Christ and to their country demand that they promote Christian education, and use all lawful means for the enlightenment of the masses.

The Pastor's Friend.

The importance of the church papers as an aid to the work of the ministry is hard to estimate, yet we fear it is not as fully realized as it should be by many pastors, or the subscription lists would be greatly lengthened. If every member of the church would carefully read the periodicals of the church, the results of the minister's efforts would be more than doubled. In the first place, the members would be familiar with the work of the church at large; their interest in this work would not be allowed to wane, and when the pastor would come before his congregation asking a contribution for some special work, he would not be presenting an entirely new subject. His people would know all about it, and not half the effort would be required to bring a hearty response that would otherwise be necessary. The pastor can present each special department of work only about once a year, but the church papers keep these things constantly before the people, and the more familiar the people are with the work of the church the more interest they will have. As familiarity decreases, interest decreases. We can not be interested in anything of which we have no knowledge.—The Watchword.

Every day is a little life, and our whole life is but a day repeated. Those, therefore, that dare lose a day, are dangerously prodigal; those that dare misspend it, desperate. —Bishop Hall.

Those that do the will of God heartily will do it speedily; while we delay, time is lost, and the heart hardened.—Henry.

"TRUST in God and work."—Broadus.

"GOD'S man, in God's place, doing God's work, in God's way, and for God's glory." That is the description of what every one of us ought to be. Let us keep it in mind.

AMONG Southern Baptist States North Carolina ranks third in numbers. In contributions the State ranks eleventh. The average is eighteen cents a member, according to reports in the Year Book. Let us pull up a notch.

WE print 7,200 papers this week. Lend us a helping hand, and next year this time it will be 10,000. After all, getting people to read the denominational organ is the solution of the problem of increasing our contributions.

A HISTORY of the North Carolina Baptists is greatly to be desired; but we had rather wait for it than to bring one out that would not stand the light. A people with a history as marvellous and as precious as ours ought to guard it more zealously than we do. Our North Carolina Baptist Historical Society is doing good work in this direction.

AT THE first meeting of the State Board of Missions and Sunday-schools this year applications were made for $20,000 to carry on worthy work. This amount could be wisely used, and it ought to be furnished. If we are to meet the responsibility which faces us as the largest organized religious body in the State, we must lose no time in having the gospel preached everywhere in the State. The history of our State mission enterprises is such as to encourage us to greater sacrifice.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL statistics are very meagre in North Carolina. The following estimate was made the past summer: There are in our Convention about 1,300 Sunday-schools, about 100,000 members of schools, and about $25,000 is contributed annually by them. Our Sunday-school work ought to receive more attention. It ought to be systematized. Just at this point there is no doubt but that we can afford to be more active. Sunday schools are beginnings; and beginnings are most important.

WE HAVE one missionary in foreign lands for 13,000 Baptists in the South. But this does not imply that it requires 13,000 Baptists to support one missionary. In some instances a church with less than five hundred members sustains a foreign missionary. The day will come when there will be a missionary in China for every five hundred Baptists in the South; and it will come sooner than we think. Modern missionary enterprise is only one hundred years old, but it has assumed vast proportions.

THE plan of co operation in missionary work among the negroes, as set forth and adopted by the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention and the State Convention of Negro Baptists, will be submitted to our Convention for endorsement. We published the plan recently. In brief, it provides for the employment of one general missionary and two district missionaries (who have already been elected); their salaries and expenses to be paid, first year one third by each organization, second year two fifths by the negroes, three fifths by the white bodies, third year one half by negroes, the other half by the white bodies.

THIS number of the RECORDER is designed with a view to the Convention, first to be of use to delegates and to stimulate those who have the various objects at heart; secondly, to in some degree give to those who cannot attend the meeting the best thought of the brethren in regard to the several departments of our work. Conventions do great good by informing those who hear discussions and reports and by arousing people to the work. The written word may do no little in this respect.

We are under great obligations to the brethren who responded to our requests for articles. Never did a paper have more responsive friends in this respect, nor more able ones to write. If we had the space we would call attention to each article by particular reference, but, that being impossible, we advise the reader to go right through column after column, and promise him he will feel when he gets through as if he had attended the Convention.

THE CONVENTION.

Ho for Greensboro! This is the Mecca of the Baptist host of North Carolina for the pilgrimage of 1895. Already hundreds of brethren and scores of Christian women have turned their faces thither. And during the coming days the thoughts of thousands will turn with eager interest toward this beautiful city.

For, to morrow night, with the Greensboro church, convenes the Baptist State Convention, the largest, if not the most important, representative body that meets annually in North Carolina. Before this number of the RECORDER shall have reached the great majority of its readers, the Convention will have been organized for business. Perhaps it is in session while you are reading these lines. Stop, brother or sister, and, before you read farther, lift your heart in silent prayer to God that the guiding, restraining, uplifting influence of the Holy Spirit may be felt throughout all the sessions of the body.

And shall not those of us who attend the Convention seek, above all else, to make it a meeting of great spiritual interest and power? Business must be transacted, of course; but there will be no incompatibility between business and devotion. Nay, the work will all be better done if our hearts, full of the spirit of our Master, shall flow together in brotherly love. There may be differences of opinion as to plans and methods. But unity of purpose and aim rises high above all minor diversities. In the midst of variations of judgment, there may be perfect harmony in spirit. And surely this harmony and fellowship will prevail if, in answer to our prayers, our Lord shall come himself and abide with us during our deliberations and our social intercourse. O for a meeting this year in Greensboro that will prove a lasting benediction to the church that welcomes us, a fresh anointing to every delegate, and a blessing to every home in the city.

Only a few years have elapsed since one of the secretaries of the Convention stated in his annual report that he had just passed through twenty-two towns west of Raleigh "in which the truth, as held by Baptists, was not proclaimed." Greensboro was one of the towns to which he referred. As the Convention meets a second time in the beautiful house of worship of the Greensboro Baptist church, now self sustaining, it will have before it an excellent "object lesson." We shall not only hear discussions as to the importance of State Missions, but there will be before us a visible proof of their value and success. For to this vigorous right arm of the Baptist body were due the first beginnings of Baptist organization in Greensboro. And could Dr. Walters return to the world and retrace the journey which he mentioned in his report, he would find that, through the wise administration of our Mission Board, "the truth as held by Baptists" is now proclaimed in almost every one of the twenty two towns.

We have just referred to the fact that the Convention will now meet a second time in Greensboro. The first time was in 1888. It was a good meeting. Cade preached the Convention sermon. Brown, of Missouri, softened our hearts by his sweet singing. Yates, the veteran of forty years in China, had just gone home to get his crown. Britton went directly from that meeting to China to take up a part of the work he had laid down. The debt on the Greenville Memorial Church was finally provided for, the Woman's College was projected and a committee appointed to report thereon at Henderson.

Sweet are the memories which still abide with us of that session of the Convention. Sweet, also, and yet sad, are our recollections of those who were with us in Greensboro in 1888, but who will not meet with us in 1895. Alas, the losses. Alas, the changes.

The President of that Convention was W. H. Pace, a man of clear head and large heart, and one of the most useful laymen that the Lord has ever given to the Baptists of North Carolina. There was a sad gap in our ranks when he went to his reward. It was the last meeting attended by J. S. Purefoy, the veteran, than whom no man ever loved the Convention more. Col. Polk was already nearing that sunset of which he eloquently and tenderly spoke. J. P. Mason, full of years and labors, has since gone to his rest. Bailey has laid down his pen. Carter has died in his mountain home. Newton has gone home to God from the dark continent which he labored to save. Carroll was not with us then; but those who have been attending our meetings will miss his commanding form and his cordial greetings. Fresh in our minds is the death of Durham. And as we write we recall many others who were always with us in heart, if not in bodily presence, who have gone to the better and brighter realm. May we not think of them as assembled together on high? Do they not watch the work dear to them?

Widely scattered in other States, but still laboring faithfully are the brethren whose presence helped to brighten that meeting. Wright, Battle, Dill, Love, Broughton, Jones, Taylor, Woodson, Watson, who were then in our Convention, are now pastors in Virginia. Blount is in Maryland, White in Georgia, McManaway in Arkansas, and Hord in Western Carolina. Greene, who was one of the secretaries, and Bostick are in China. Ah, the changes that come with the fleeting years.

When, however, we shall look around us in the Convention of this week, we can take fresh courage and be glad. For we shall recognize scores of workers, strong men and true, who have come into our midst or have been raised up among us. One and another in the advancing army has been struck down or removed. Thank God for the men, recruits or veterans, who step into their vacant places.

What a joy it will be to the brethren to greet each other again, or, for the first time, to look into the faces and grasp the hands of those whom they have known only through the columns of the RECORDER. Shall we not all avail ourselves of this opportunity to enlarge the range of our personal acquaintance in the Baptist brotherhood of North Carolina? The territory of our Convention is one of magnificent distances, especially from east to west. We happen this year to meet near the centre. This will afford an unusual opportunity to brethren from all sections for making each other's acquaintance. Let us not wait for formal introductions. The fact that we are Baptists who have come together in our annual family gathering will be introduction enough.

We know of nothing to come before the Convention that will be likely to mar its harmony or to greatly modify its general policy. There will, of course, be free and full discussion of every measure that may be proposed. All shades of opinion have equal right to expression. Open and general discussion is often very helpful. But when, after sufficient ventilation of views, a vote is taken, the decision of the majority is, according to our Baptist notions, the end of controversy.

When we remember the great number of Baptists who, directly or indirectly, are represented in the Convention, we cannot but be impressed with the fact that such a meeting has great significance, and that such a body has great dignity. And while this sense of the dignity of the Convention should never repress ease of discussion or the play of genial and kindly humor, it should secure uniform courtesy of bearing and freedom from acrimonious debate. And these ends will be even more certainly reached if we can at all times remember that we have come together in a pre-eminently and distinctively religious meeting to attend to the business of the King.

THE ROUND OF THE ASSOCIATIONS.

There are forty five Associations within the bounds of the Baptist State Convention, with a membership ranging from one to ten thousand each. In and through these organizations of our churches, the extent and efficiency of our denominational enterprises are, for the most part, determined. Are our Associations gaining in numbers, in liberality, in consecrated, intelligent workers, in zeal for the spread of the gospel, and all the blessings it it sures? If so, we have cause for rejoicing, as we close the account of the year's work.

The closing of 1895 marks a good year in the history of our Associations. The churches have been fully and competently represented in the persons of their delegates, who have participated more actively in the work of the Associations than is usually the case. In the fewest instances (and we do not recall one) has a church failed to report the full amount which it undertook to raise, and in many cases more than this amount was sent up.

There has not only been no discord about what ought to be done, but no disagreement in the methods of doing it. The weather has been lovely, little rain, no freshets, no storms; this, and the fact that our meetings have, as a rule, been held in exceptionally fine communities, brought the people out in larger numbers than ever before.

The hopeful and comparatively prosperous condition of the country has been marked on the countenances and in the contributions of the brethren.

Executive Committees have been appointed in Associations that heretofore had none; others, that heretofore existed, have for the past year shown more energy and capacity for the work in hand. Let us look to this source more than ever for the better organization of our work, for the complete possession of the present destitution, and for the enlargement of our contributions for all objects.

The subject of general education has been wisely and well discussed at all of our meetings. Special emphasis has been laid on Associational schools for the better education of our boys and girls in the country and as feeders to Wake Forest College. A good number of these have been arranged for this year.

The subject of Temperance has had a fair and earnest share of consideration along with other objects of our meetings. The views expressed on this subject by the brethren have been conservative and sensible, showing more and more that they are relying on the home, the Sunday schools, education, and the preaching of a pure gospel, for the riddance of this evil, rather than trusting to cranks, impulsive fanatics and political agitators.

The growth and blessings of the Sunday-schools are seen in the bright, hopeful young men we have seen taking part in the business and discussions before our Associations during the year 1895 Let us encourage and help them more than we have heretofore done, remembering that with them rests the future of these organizations. The Supply Store at Raleigh is now better known to the officers and teachers of our schools, and will be relied on hereafter for all that is necessary to make the Sunday school interesting and profitable.

The Ministerial Relief Board comes out of the present campaign with some new and lasting friends. Associations that have not heretofore reckoned this Board among its objects of support will send up collections to it during the coming year.

Brethren in every quarter have asked affectionately about Bro. Mills when the Orphanage was before us. Bro. Boone, though a stranger to many, yet his force of character, his evident fitness for the work, and the strength of his cause, carried him to the hearts and into the pockets of the brethren. The brethren approve the action of the Orphanage Trustees in putting Charity and Children on its own affairs, disconnecting it from other finances of the Orphanage.

The encouragement which will come from the consideration of these things and many others, will make the meeting at Greensboro an occasion of joy and hope to those present, and for yet larger things during the year now before us. Let us all who can meet and share in the successful triumphs of our Master's work, not forgetting to remember those who will not be present, but whose contributions are in and whose prayers will ascend from humble homes, fields and places of business for the harmony and success of the Lord's work.

NEWS NOTES.

....Rev. N S. Jones and family have returned from a visit to Evergreen, Ala.

....The brethren of Lumber Bridge have just completed a very creditable house of worship.

...."The workers never grumble, and the grumblers never work."—Elias Dodson. A good rule.

...."The North Carolina men (there are sixteen of them) at the Seminary are all doing well," writes Bro. E. S. Reaves.

....The Convention has already been invited to meet at Greenville next year. Oxford, Newbern and Morganton are also mentioned.

....The Raleigh Association had a fine session at Hephzibah church, Wake county, last week. Bro. Caddell was there and will report it next week.

....Rev. R. D. Cross of Windsor has been called to preach at Union Baptist church one Sunday in each month, Rev. Sam'l Saunders having resigned.

....Rev. Dr. B. D. Gray reports a glorious meeting in his church at Birmingham, Ala., in which Rev. J. L. White preached. There were forty-six additions to the church.

....Those who go to Greensboro with a view to attending the young people's meeting will be well repaid. It is in good hands, and will give the Convention a good running start.

....There were 175,000 baptisms in the United States in 1893; in 1894 there were 205 000 Baptists contributed to benevolent objects in 1893; $12,560,000, in 1894, $11,670,000.

....In the last ten years Baptists in the United States have increased 1,132,758; Methodists (north) 532 941, Methodists (south) 379,976; Presbyterians (north) 214,625; Episcopalians 188,000.

....Rev. G. S. Williams, formerly of the Raleigh Baptist Tabernacle but now of Bristol, Va., has been called to the pastorate of Metropolitan Baptist church, Washington, D. C., succeeding the late Rev. Green Clay Smith.

... Board can be had at hotels (Benbow and McAdoo) at $1.50 a day, and at boarding houses at $1 00, Pastor Johnson (Greensboro) advises us to say.

....The fourth Baptist church of Durham was dedicated last Sunday. Rev. W. A. Smith is pastor. Bro. Smith's Cedar Rock Academy closes Dec. 15.

....We were glad to meet Rev. C. S. Cashwell and Rev. J. B. Boone in Atlanta during the young people's meeting. Both of them enjoyed the meeting and the exposition.

....Acknowledgment of funds for the Yates Memorial, received by Mrs. Jas. A. Briggs, will be found this week under the head "Acknowledgments," made by Treasurer J. D. Boushall.

....The annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Societies will be held in the Market Street Methodist church, Greensboro, Dec. 6 and 7, not Dec. 5 and 6, as stated by mistake in another column.

....The North Carolina Baptist Almanac is ready for distribution. It is well worth the money. Send orders to Dr. N. B. Cobb, Raleigh, N. C. 10 cents a copy. Wholesale rates will be made on application.

....We were glad to have in our office last week brethren L. J. Andrews of Bynums, Nat. Allen of South Carolina, J. G. Pulliam of Smithfield, J. B. Crudup of Littleton, J. B. Boone of Thomasville, C. W. Blanchard of Cary.

....Miss Emma L Miller has accepted a position in the Faculty of Shaw University. Miss Miller has been Superintendent of woman's mission work west of Rocky Mountains, and will be a valued acquisition to that work in our state.

....We wish there were some means of getting the Associations to agree on a schedule of meetings which will enable the representatives of the several objects to attend them all. Every argument is in favor of such a plan. How about a central committee?

....Bro. C. H. Beckwith, father of the late Prof. Beckwith of Wake Forest College, has returned to North Carolina to live after twelve years' of residence in Georgia. He is located at Raleigh. We join with many friends in welcoming him back home and wishing him success.

....Rev. J. F. Love's book, "The Southern Baptist Pulpit," a compilation of sermons preached in Washington during the Jubilee Convention, designed to represent Southern Baptists to the world, is ready for the public. Bro. Love may be addressed at Suffolk, Va.

....We are pleased to add to our exchange list the Pamlico Herald, edited by Rev. W. F. Fry, Vandemere, N. C. Bro. Fry is doing hard and telling work in his section. As preacher, teacher and editor, we do not know of a brother more worthy of the co-operation and prayers of his brethren.

....The Western North Carolina Methodist Conference met at Reidsville last week. There were eighteen applicants for itineracy, but scarcely more than half that number were appointed, as no active preacher in the conference had died. One hundred and fifty-five pastoral charges were served this year.

... A committee of five (brethren F. P. Hobgood, J. B. Boone, J. D Hufham, C. E. Taylor, L W. Bagly, E. K. Proctor, Jr., and J. B. Brewer) to report a plan for closer relation between Wake Forest and the other Baptist schools of the State, was appointed at the last Convention to report at Greensboro.

....In 1889 (first year) the Woman's Missionary Union auxiliary to Southern Baptist Convention raised $18 716 28 for Foreign Missions; in 1894 it raised $24,933,64 for that object. In 1889 it raised $13, 057.41 for Home Missions; in 1894 it raised $33,515.61. The first Baptist woman's missionary society was organized in 1871 at Newberry, S. C.

....The Virginia Young People met in annual convention at Richmond last week. The movement in that State three years ago was represented by nine unions and 865 members; the meeting last week reported 101 unions and 6,500 members. John Garland Pollard was elected president, and Dr. G. F. Bagby was elected secretary. The latter will receive a salary.

...."The Convention was a most gratifying success—a glorious meeting, and will be recalled with pleasure during the lifetime of every delegate and visitor. All agree that this was in many respects the best meeting of the Convention in its history. The Greensboro church and the good people of that splendid city generously and most pleasantly entertained their Baptist brethren."—Biblical Recorder, Nov. 21, 1888.

....The report on Methods of State Evangelization authorized the State Board to employ an assistant secretary. This provision was also in the report of the majority of the committee, which was rejected. It was thought wisest to leave the final decision in the hands of the State Board. We noticed that in the discussion of State Missions on Tuesday, there were a number of speeches in favor of such an appointment.—Religious Herald.

....Three hundred and fifty six children have been received at our Orphanage since it was opened in 1885. No one can estimate the good that has thus been done for the world nor the suffering that has been prevented. The capacity of the Orphanage can be doubled without increasing the expense in anything like that proportion. One hundred and eighty seven children have been sent away honorably from the institution. The highest number there this year is 137. Arrangements will be perfected for those who go to the Convention to make an excursion of several hours to Thomasville. The price will be small, and we hope many will go.

....."The very best money we spend for missions is that we spend in going up to our Conventions."—J. B. Gambrell.

....Many of our readers will join us in sending congratulations to Bro. Frank Royall of China who was married to Miss Mary D. Sullivan (also of China) in October. We wish them a long and happy life of usefulness.

....Sister V. C. Howell informs us that our church at Falls of Tar River now numbers twenty-two members, and a Sunday-school is going on. The largest factory in the state is located here. The population is already 800.

....Bro. P. A. Dunn of Wake Forest has attended earlier Conventions than any living brother. He can remember his first—"in the piny woods of Johnston county, and the brethren camped out," he says. We hope he will be at Greensboro.

....Since organization of the Ministers' Relief Board at Convention of 1889 (organized in Wilmington 1890) $3 159 59 has been received, of which $1,878 25 has been given to twenty beneficiaries, and $1,040 93 has been put in the permanent fund.

....Dr. Battle's letter in this paper will be read with interest. Our brother has been in the shadow of affliction lately, his mother, wife of Gen. Battle having died after months of suffering. Our readers will join us in sympathy to our brother.

....We have provided for all who have sent their names and have about ten homes over, and these will be filled. Please say that those who have not sent their names cannot be provided for. We are looking forward with great pleasure to the Convention.—L Johnson.

....The extent of cotton manufacturing in this State was magnificently set forth in the News and Observer November 28 h Without having seen the paper one would never believe that our growth in this respect has been so great. There are 184 cotton mills in the State. It is something to be proud of, too, that a State daily can make such an edition as this number.

...."I had come to think of him as one of the mainstays of our Southern Baptist Convention," said Dr. J. M Frost, when we told him of the death of Dr. Durham. In truth Bro. Durham was seldom seen addressing the Convention, but he die great service as a trustee of our Seminary and in an advisory capacity for the Boards. It is not the big speech-maker who does the work.

....Bro. H. H. Horn of the State University was chosen president of the State Sunday school Convention at Goldsboro last week. The session of the convention was a good one. We clip from the News and Observer: "Mr N. B. Broughton was the central figure of the convention; moving every where, knowing everybody, seeing every thing and always knowing when, how and where to do the proper thing. He would make a fine executive officer anywhere."

....Mr. Geo. Muller, the founder of the great Orphanage, recently celebrated his ninetieth birth day, Among the letters he received were many containing checks from former inmates of the Orphan houses. In a recent interview Mr. Muller states that the total amount of money received by prayer and faith for the various objects of the institution since March 5, 1834, to May 6 1895 has been $6,869,743, and by this sum 120,763 persons have been taught in the schools supported by the funds of the institution.—Evangel. Mr. Muller is a Baptist. He has received all this money without making a public appeal. He believes in prayer.

....Many of our readers will hear with sorrow of the death of Bro. Geo. W. Blount of Wilson. For many years he had been a useful and prominent laymen in our denomination. He was a trustee of Wake Forest College. As a lawyer he led an exemplary life and commanded the confidence and respect of his fellows. As editor of the Wilson Mirror he did good work. He was for some time Grand Master of the Grand Lodge (State) of Masons. Several months ago he suffered a stroke of paralysis, and though he bore up against it with admirable courage, a second attack was more than he could withstand. We extend our sympathy to his family.

....The following are necessarily not exactly correct being up to Monday evening; but they indicate about what our denomination has done for its several objects during the year now closed: State Missions $10,-994 93; Foreign Missions 6 400 00; Home Missions 3 558 92. Education (including Royal Chair $3 738 11; Female University $6,500; Board of Education $2,931 52)—total $13,169 63; Orphanage $9 368 75; Ministerial Relief $543.84; Sunday-schools, $4,648 50; Church Extension $85,000. We have reason to believe that a debt will not be reported on State Missions. Robeson Association and Raleigh Association and others have not reported for State Missions.

Usual Reduced Railroad Rates.

The usual reduction of railroad rates has been granted delegates and visitors to the Baptist State Convention at Greensboro. Tickets will be on sale December 2d—6th inclusive, good to Dec. 12th, 1895

N. B. BROUGHTON, Secretary.

Royall Chair.

W. A. Slater, $25 00; W. H. Davis, $1 00; T. J. Williams, 2 00; B F Keith, Jr., 20 00; Wm. Graham, 2 00; Miss Kate Smith, 1 00; Rev. J. N. Stallings for his church in Davie county, 7 00. Total, $58 00.

THOMAS H. BRIGGS,
Treasurer Wake Forest College.
Raleigh, Dec. 2, 1895.

Sixty-five Years' Contributions.

The contributions of the churches through the years of the Baptist State Convention's history, as shown by the report of the Treasurer and published in the minutes, have steadily grown. It is not to be understood that these reports show all that the churches have done, even for the objects named, but only the amounts which passed through the Treasurer's hands. To take every year since the Convention's organization would make the table too long, and, hence for fifty years, only one year in ten is given, except the last five years, which are given continuously, namely:

State Missions $320 62; Education, $35.00.

1840.

1850.

1860.

1870.

State Missions, $1,111 32; Home Missions, $27 50; Foreign Missions, $622 28; Education, $1 447 54; Sunday schools, $20 38

1880.

State Missions, $3 260 55; Home Missions, $1,196 38; Foreign Missions, $2 789 35; Education, $1,750 05; Sunday schools, $1,823 06.

State Missions, $12,348 31; Home Missions, $3,269 18; Foreign Missions, $8 902 06; Education, $3 620 75; Colportage, $1,364 99; Sunday schools, $6,747 21; Orphanage, $15,-131.13

1891.

State Missions, $14 028 17; Home Missions, $3,544 52; Foreign Missions, $9,255 80; Education, 3 344 32; Colportage, $1,011 31; Sunday schools, $6,614.66; Orphanage, $14,-695 59.

State Missions, $14,272 95; Home Missions, $6 965.98; Foreign Missions, $9 869 83; Education, $22,705 83; Colportage, $480 76; Sunday-schools, $6 838 20; Orphanage, $12,-866 80; Baptist Female University, $15,-207 40.

Woman's Missionary Union contributed $3,916 85.

State Missions, $13,309.87; Home Missions, $8,553 19; Foreign Missions $7,017 27; Education, $3,235 69; Colportage, $33 66; Sunday-schools, $5 659 80; Orphanage, $11,-169 12; Baptist Female University, $1,320.

Woman's Missionary Union contributed $4,955.71.

State Missions, $14,332 63; Home Missions, $2 965 00; Foreign Missions, $7 815 92; Education, $3,445 17; Colportage, $48 04; Sunday school, $6,115 62; Orphanage, $9,-937 40; Baptist Female University, $5 00.

Woman's Missionary Union contributed $3,574 97.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONVENTION

South Carolina Baptist State Convention.

The S. C. Baptists have a custom of holding a Minister's Conference the day before the Convention. This Conference this year was well attended and very helpful to all the pastors.

The Convention convened Thursday night and adjourned Saturday night. The session was the best in many years. A meeting of remarkable harmony and inspiration. Important questions were considered, some of them new questions, and yet not a jar or note of discord was felt. Affiliation with our Northern brethren in a plan to help the Negro was agreed upon without the least ripple of discontent on the part of any. The question of the B. Y. P. U. was settled without a word of debate by passing a recomendation as follows: 1. That the Convention approve of the organization of young people's societies in the churches and under their control. 2 That the organization of a State Union be referred to the churches for their free action according to their own wisdom.

Over four thousand was raised in pledges for Furman University and an agent is in the field to continue the work. There was much enthusiasm on the subject of education.

Greenville is a Baptist city and is to the Baptist of S. C. some what as Jerusalem was to the Jews. Every one had a good time.

Our new Assistant Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board was with us and made a fine impression on the Convention. So did Bro. T. C. Britton of China.

Our next session will be held in Charleston. R. F.

There is certainly a field for Our Young People, the admirable fortnightly periodical issued by the American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia, Pa. Its several departments are well arranged, and the plans for 1896 indicate decided improvement. There are in every Sunday school more or less young people who would be interested in this paper. By all means send for samples for the coming year.

Indian Springs church, used jointly by Baptists and Methodists, has been burned.

On Sunday-school Work.

No broader or more fertile field for useful and helpful work to our churches is open to the Baptists of North Carolina than that of the Sunday-school. That our churches in many places have failed to appreciate this fact is very apparent to any one in looking over the Minutes of different associations.

It is easier to organize a Sunday school than to constitute a church.

It is easier to constitute a church where there is a Sunday school than without it.

The conditions for admittance to the Sunday school are such as to make it very easy to begin. The work to be done affords excellent opportunity for the christian to enter the Lord's vineyard, and the church to receive back a force of workers that will strengthen all her lines.

The Baptists of North Carolina should lose no time in thoroughly organizing their Sunday-school work, and in doing so undertake a great movement in planting new schools, stimulating and encouraging those organized and holding Normal Institutes for training officers and teachers.

We hope our brethren at the Convention will take this matter in hand and give it proper time to thoroughly plan the work for the coming year. N. B. BROUGHTON.

Notes from Henderson.

The people here in Henderson were shocked at the death of Dr. Durham. There were many here who claimed him as a personal friend, and to them the death came as a sad bereavement. For my part, I felt that there was no man whom we could less easily spare to the cause of Christ in North Carolina than this true and tried soldier of the cross. May God, who does nothing wrong, now raise up the right man to take his place.

Yesterday was a busy day with the Henderson pastor, but a very pleasant day. He taught a Sunday-school class twice and preached three times, one of each being at the chapel three miles in the country. In the morning he preached on State Missions, and right here he wants to bear witness to the fact that he has the finest folk in all the land. He asked for fifty dollars as a free will offering, to try to take the State Board to the convention free of debt. It was given, and will be duly forwarded this week.

That was not the only special collection yesterday. The Sunday school raised, by an extra effort, money to buy some new Sunday-school song books. The entire amount was not secured but the balance will soon be forth coming.

Nor is that all. On Thursday night, we are to have at the church a song service given by the choir, at which time the pastor will present the leading features of the Yates Memorial, and a collection will be taken for that most worthy object. This is being pushed by the ladies of the church.

So you see, if to be active in money matters and church beneficence bespeaks progress, we have much to be thankful for. Would that God would add a corresponding amount of deep spirituality! Only growth in grace, both in himself and in his charge, will satisfy their unworthy pastor.

JUNIUS W. MILLARD.

Notes from Aulander.

It was with a deep sense of personal loss that I heard the news of our Bro. Durham's death. I regard his removal from earth as a sad bereavement to the denomination of the State, and a serious drawback to our State Mission work between this and the Convention.

BRO. T. C. BRITTON OF CHINA

has just made a trip with me to Republican church where on Saturday and Sunday he spoke to the delight and edification of large congregations on his work in China. He also spoke to my people at Aulander Sunday night on the same subject. Bro. Britton made three of the strongest and most appropriate mission talks that I have heard in a long time, and they did my people great good. He spoke as an eye, ear and heart witness of these things he declared, and therefore did not fail to elicit the interest and sympathy of his audiences. He expressed great desire to return to his chosen field as soon as Sister Britton's health is sufficiently restored to justify it.

PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

I had the peculiar pleasure of laboring for a week in a protracted meeting with the brethren at Spring Vale church, Sampson county (the week after the second Sunday in August), during which seventeen were received into the fellowship of the church. Under the wise leadership of Bro. R. C. Sandlin, the membership seems to be united and hopeful, and I can bear them record that they are a noble and faithful band of workers in the vineyard of the Master. They represent some of the salt of the earth.

At Aulander, on Monday after the second Sunday in September, Bro. C. W. Scarborough of Murfreesboro joined me in a protracted effort with my church here, and did some exceptionally good and wholesome preaching for us. During the meeting twenty-six were added to the church.

EDUCATION IN OUR COMMUNITY.

Our academy under the management of Rev. J. B. Newton, principal, and Miss Duffie Conn of Raleigh, assistant, is in a flourishing condition and doing good, earnest work.

STATE MISSION BOARD.

I trust the State Mission Board will be able to report out of debt at the approaching Convention in Greensboro. May the Holy Spirit incline the hearts of our people to respond quickly and liberally to the last appeal of our lamented Corresponding Secretary.

OUR PAPER.

May the RECORDER continue to enjoy the increasing favor of all our people, and its editor grow in "favor with God and man."

Respectfully, L. M. CURTIS.

Paragraphs from Henry W. Battle.

"Who will take his place?"—it was the first thought that came to my mind when the news of the sudden death of the beloved Durham reached me. It is sad, very sad, to lose the man many of us honored and loved so much, but it is sadder far to contemplate the gap in the ranks of North Carolina Baptists. Who so earnest, so untiring, so fearless, so mighty with the people? I am sure I do not know. But I am equally sure that God reigns, and that his eye keeps sleepless vigil above his own. Perhaps, after all, the man to take the honored Durham's place is not the one now most needed. He did a work that might well have satisfied the sanctified ambition of any man, and though taken from us in the prime of his physical manhood and the maturity of his vigorous mental powers, who will say that work—so individual—was not rounded off by the Master's hand? I love to think that though the king dies, the King lives, and the kingdom is unending! Oh the ravages that death makes, but thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory!

The General Association of Virginia, which recently held its seventy-second session with the First Baptist church at Petersburg, has gone into history with the blessings of all Virginia on its head. Quite five hundred guests honored our homes and delighted our hospitable people. The city smiled her sweetest smile and extended her heartiest welcome; the strangers within her gates reciprocated appreciative sentiments, with equal enthusiasm. The deliberations of the body were characterized by a dignified decorum, eminent thoughtfulness and pre eminent spirituality. Dr. T. S. Dunaway is the prince of presiding officers, and Dr. Landrum's great introductory sermon keyed up the body to a high pitch of tender spirituality—the very essence of old time religion. The great issue involved in the proposition to consolidate the Sunday school and Bible Board, located at Petersburg, with the State Mission Board, located at Richmond, was fairly joined. We had what the moderator called "the war of the giants," but no heart blood stained our swords, and when the battle was over, Virginia Baptists saw eye to eye and stood shoulder to shoulder. It was an inspiring spectacle as opposing champions bowed with equal fealty to the will of Virginia Baptists, and then rejoiced together that the last vestige of discord had passed away and left not a rack behind.

May you have an equally delightful and profitable session at Greensboro! I know you will stand in the shadow of the cloud, but God's presence can make the cloud luminous with his love.

As I wrote Greensboro I was reminded that a gifted young minister residing in that city completely captured my church, and all Petersburg, last summer. Rev. Rufus Weaver supplied for me, and by his ingratiating manners, beautiful Christian spirit, bright and original thinking and eloquent preaching, made an impression upon this city no other young man has ever equalled. Let Weaver hold that genius of his down to wise study for a few years, and then let North Carolina hold Weaver—if she can.

Rev. J. F. Love's book, "The Southern Baptist Pulpit," made its debut at Petersburg during the General Association. Mechanically, it is a gem of the printer's art. And within the beautiful covers are some of the choicest thoughts of some of the reigning spirits of the Baptist pulpit. It would be an unutterable shame if our people fail to appreciate such a work. What could be more handsomely put than the simple dedication: "To the Baptists of America, a people who love an open Bible and a pure gospel. The editor."

In January I go (D. V.) to Boston. Rev. W. G. Jones, pastor of the Centre Street Baptist church, has taken a promise from me to hold a meeting for his people, and the evangelistic committee of the city have invited me to hold "The Mid day Series for Business" in one of the principal public halls. It will be hard work to conduct both during the same period, but I like that. Bro. Jones is a North Carolina boy who is doing a great work at the Hub. I will write you of Boston, and especially of Bro. Jones, later. HENRY W. BATTLE.

We note several changes in the price of the Quarterlies issued by the American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia. The immense circulation that has been gained for them makes this possible. Every attention seems to be paid to the quality of these quarterlies, and still the prices have been lowered again and again, until now they touch the bottom point. They fully meet the needs of any school that might be named, with Primary, Intermediate, Advanced, and Senior Grade Helps. A full set of these quarterlies can be obtained as samples on application by those who are not familiar with them.

One of the most popular holiday books for children is the large print, illustrated life of Gen. Robt. E. Lee. It will fill a noble mission in interesting young minds in history and by holding before them a high ideal. We heartily commend it. W. G. Separk, Mgr. Raleigh Stationery Company, has it on sale.

Dr. B. L. Whitman, President of Columbian University, Washington, D. C., has been elected to preach the sermon before the graduating class at Wake Forest in June.

Things Here and There.

Dear Recorder:—Let me have just a short space to say a few things:

BEULAH.

The new church which I organized last July is doing well. At our last meeting we received two members. The church is getting in the notion of having a house of worship. We have a beautiful lot on which to build. The church, at its last meeting, appointed a building committee, and we want to go to work soon to build. Any brother who would like to help a good cause would do well to send me a dollar for this house.

MAPLE GROVE STAND.

The mission point, at which I have preached for a year, is in the northeastern part of Catawba county. The interest seems to be good on the part of quite a number of the people of the community, yet there is much prejudice in the hearts of the Lutheran preachers and some of their people toward us. One preacher told his congregation not to associate with any one but members of their own church. But we believe God's truth will finally triumph. We want to build a house at this place also during this year. We need one very much because we have no place to meet for worship only at a stand on our lot, which will not do for the winter months. The Executive Committee of the South Fork Association advised the building of a house here as soon as possible, when we met in our last meeting. We hope to get some help for this house. So you see we have two new houses on hand for this year which means quite an amount of work. May the Lord help us to make no mistake and to get them both completed.

CATAWBA.

Well, we have just furnished our house here with an outfit of new lamps, had some repairing done to the steeple of the house and painted it. During the last year Catawba's members trebled their contributions for benevolent objects. We hope there has been some growth in grace also.

PENELOPE.

Last week we dropped in a day and night with Bro. C. M. Murchison and his excellent wife and somewhat surprised them. We had the pleasure of spending some hours in the school of Bro. Murchinson, which were quite pleasant to us, as we always feel at home in the school room. Bro. Murchison now has a very good school, perhaps the best he has ever had at this place. He prepares students for college at a very moderate cost; also gives those not wishing to attend college a good preparation for business life. We would recommend his school to parents who want a good school at a moderate cost, where the location is healthy and the moral atmosphere is also pure. Brother Murchison can give you all of these: especially to the South Fork Association would we recommend this school. Go and visit the school and see what it is for yourself. We need more good schools where our Baptist boys and girls are prepared for college or for the duties of life. The Lord hasten the time when we shall have them.

HICKORY.

We stopped a few hours at this place and looked in upon Bro. Cashwell and brethren. Bro. Cashwell is a busy pastor and is doing a good work. Brethren Martin, Click and Whitesides were cheerful as usual.

Well, I am at home again. God bless the RECORDER. D. P. BRIDGES.

Meeting at Mount Airy.

On the second Sunday in November, though dreary and raining, a series of meetings began with the Mt. Airy Baptist church. The pastor preached that day, morning and night, and was joined on Monday night following by Rev. W. B. Oliver, pastor of the First Baptist church of Wilmington, N. C. Bro. Oliver preached each day at 11 o'clock a. m. and 7:30 o'clock p. m. for one week. He is a model preacher. He possesses a clear head, sympathetic heart, good delivery, and commanding power. Our people were enthusiastically pleased with him. There was none of the usual protracted-meeting high pressure about the services; they were all voluntary. The interest steadily increased, showing itself in larger attendance, more attentive listening, falling tears, and quite a number of professions of faith in Christ.

The meeting closed with the regular services on the fourth Sunday night. There were eight additions to the church, and others are reading and thinking preparatory to joining. J. H. LAMBERTH.

A North Carolina Baptist History.

BY REV. JOHN E. WHITE.

A few months ago I received a letter from a gentleman in Mississippi, named Burkitt. The letter indicated a writer of intelligence and education. The object of the letter was to secure arrangements with the Chowan Association which would make it possible for him to travel in the bounds of these Associations and lecture upon early Baptist history in North Carolina. He agreed to furnish facts not generally known and likely to be of interest to those interested in the early struggle of our Baptist forefathers for establishment in this State. His grandfather, Lemuel Burkitt, here had lived, worked and died, and as we all well know, was no mean figure among those who go as far back as 1790, in laying the foundations for our present attainment in numbers and influence.

This brother made no charge for his labor, asking only that his expenses be paid. The matter could not be arranged. It was dropped. In all probability no further effort will be made to secure the interesting information in the possession of Bro. Burkett of Mississippi. When he dies, the information will most likely die with him.

This letter and our failure to profit by his generous proposition have led me to reflect upon the fact that our Baptist history in North Carolina—chaotic, traditional and fragmentary as it is—is rapidly passing into oblivion. Every year marks the passing away of some man whose information about important Baptist history would be of great value. Every year it becomes more difficult for a record sufficiently connected to be called a history of the origin, struggles and achievements of Baptists in North Carolina to be made.

And this reflection gives birth to the suggestion, that the surest and quickest way to have the work done by a competent hand is for the Baptist State Convention assembling in Greensboro to take the matter in hand, designate some brother (or brethren working in collaboration) to prepare for the press

A HISTORY OF NORTH CAROLINA BAPTISTS.

And also that the Convention undertake through the churches the financial responsibility of its issue and sale. Also, providing reasonable remuneration for those who have done the work.

Allow me to mention a few reasons which convince me of the necessity of such a history, the practical benefits from it, and the need to attend to the matter at once.

First. It is not a task of extraordinary difficulty. There is data within reach to furnish material needed: tradition, court records, Associational histories, &c. Semple's history of Virginia Baptists devotes almost an entire chapter to the Baptist beginning in North Carolina about 1750 by Stearnes and Marshall. Dr. J. D. Hufham has in some shape collected a great amount of material indispensible to such a work. Dr. T. E. Skinner is stored with exact knowledge of the beginning of our Conventional history. A great many sources of information would open before a diligent and earnest inquiry.

Second. It is a history worthy to be told. The world needs acquaintance with its record of devotion, patriotism and loyalty to God and His Word. Such a history we owe as a tribute to the heroic past, as a duty to the encouraging present, and as an earnest of the glorious future.

Robert Semple, prefacing his history already alluded to, says that he undertook the task actuated by "an ardent wish for the prosperity of truth," which he really thought could be greatly promoted by a plain and simple exhibition of God's dealing toward his people."

Are we not in North Carolina God's people, too? And has his dealing with us been less marked than his dealing elsewhere? And needs it not to be recorded for truth's sake?

North Carolina Baptists have a history, and God is in that history.

Third. It would be of great practical value. Such a history would put into convenient and more permanent shape the data and material which at some future day will be demanded for a larger and more comprehensive work of the same kind.

Such a history is needed to inspire young Baptists with the spirit of those who struck the first blow for Baptist establishment in North Carolina. It is held to be quite as important to keep liberty as it is to win it, and quite as difficult. And to preserve what our forefathers gained needs heroism and devotion like theirs. Such a book could be utilized practically in the young people's movement.

It would also make possible in an intelligent way the teaching of Baptist history in Baptist schools. At present, it is not possible.

Now it is suggested that the Convention select the suitable man or men, commission them and get behind them financially. We have waited for some brother to volunteer to do the work, but we are no nearer a history of North Carolina Baptists now, so far as the writer knows, than we were twenty years ago. Death does not wait for histories. It was the cherished purpose of our lamented Secretary, Dr. Durham, to write a history of the Baptist State Convention. But death didn't wait; it never does.

And our sources of information are drying up. If the history is ever to be written, now is the time for it to be done. The memories of Egypt furnish no revelation of the lost art of embalming. North Carolina cemeteries will not yield up the secrets of North Carolina Baptist history. All agree that it is needed, and all lament that we do not possess it. Let us address ourselves to some practical effort to secure the history. Dr. Hufham or John T. Albritton or both, are fitted admirably by ability and experience for such an undertaking.

Goldsboro, N. C.

Our Orphanage.

BY E. E. HILLIARD, ESQ.

However much men differ about other things, all true Christians should be of one mind concerning the keeping of God's Word as they honestly and conscientiously understand it. And no really intelligent Christian believer can fail to understand the teaching of the Bible concerning orphans.

When "Moses drew near unto the thick darkness where God was" to receive the laws which he was to lay before Israel, the Lord gave him this statute: "Ye shall not afflict any widow or fatherless child. If thou afflict them in anywise and they cry at all unto me, I will surely hear their cry; and my wrath shall wax hot, and I will kill you with the sword; and your wives shall be widows, and your children fatherless."

So God was careful to give to Israel instruction concerning the comfort and protection of widows and orphans. And some fifteen hundred years later, James, moved by the Holy Spirit, left a like record and implied admonition when he wrote, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

The statutes which God gave to Israel, through Moses, concerning the fatherless, have not been repealed. The same "pure and undefiled religion" which had regard to the comfort of orphans when James wrote, reigns in the hearts and lives of the true and faithful followers of Christ to day.

This is indeed an age of institutions and organizations, and such of these as pertain to the interests of Christ's kingdom in the earth should be held dear by God's people, and for these they should ever be ready to speak and labor and pray.

The Baptists of North Carolina are highly favored and greatly blessed of God in the multitude of interests that claim their attention and call for their support. There is an unseen development in much of this which our finite minds can never grasp, which God's workers will never understand until they shall have finished their work on earth and shall be called to their heritage above.

The Lord has committed to us no more important interest than our Orphanage at Thomasville. It appeals to every Baptist in North Carolina with peculiar claims. The cause is altogether worthy and its needs are pressing.

For more than half a century the Baptists of the State have sacrificed for Wake Forest College with a heroism that is commendable before all men. In the self same spirit they are now laying their hands to the work of building a great institution in our capital city, through which they propose to do for the Baptist girls of the State what Wake Forest is doing for the Baptist boys.

But whatever shall be the growth and influence of Wake Forest in the stretch of years to come; and whatever shall be the efficiency of the Baptist Female University in the years that are all untried (and may they both transcend our most sanguine hopes and expectations) it may be fairly assumed that neither of these great educational institutions will develop more strength and support for the kingdom of Christ and more real good to the citizenship of the State, according to the amount of money and energy invested in each, than will the Baptist Orphanage at Thomasville.

Students enter these higher institutions of learning with the bent of their characters already fixed; and whatever is effected in their mental and moral development, is only an enlargement of the character that is already practically formed. On the other hand, the children who find shelter and a home in the Orphanage are taken in the formative period of their characters while their young minds are more plastic and tender. Some of the best men and women in the land to day were trained in orphan homes, and in their strong manhood and womanhood are seen the well rounded Christian characters that are a glory to God and a joy to the earth.

The great host of Baptists in North Carolina need only to understand of the work of the Orphanage, realize the importance of its support, and its needs will soon be well supplied. Let every Baptist church or Sunday-school that possibly can do so, send a representative to the Orphanage to learn what it really is and observe its work; and then let every church and Sunday school adopt some systematic plan of contributing to its support, and its full maintenance will be but a breakfast task. With some such plan in every church and Sunday school in the State, the Orphanage would never be in serious want; nor would the support to Wake Forest and the Baptist Female University be lessened, but greatly increased, through this enlarged spirit of liberality and the larger number of friends to Baptist interests in the young men and young women sent out from the Orphanage.

Some churches and Sunday-schools have adopted the plan of making special collections for the Orphanage once a month. This is good; and with every Baptist church and Sunday-school in the State doing as much, the institution will soon be greatly enlarged, and half a thousand homeless ones will there be sheltered and clothed and fed and trained, and sent out to exemplify to the world the power for good there is in well developed Christian characters.

The Denominational State Paper and Missions.

BY REV. E. Y. MULLINS, ASSOCIATE SECRETARY FOREIGN MISSION BOARD

I agree with the writer who says the greatest of all the inventions or discoveries of man is not steam, nor electricity, nor any of the more recent brilliant truths in the realm of science, but rather that ancient invention of the alphabet. This lies at the very foundation of progress. Most of that which is greatest in the history of past ages comes to us through the medium of the alphabet, combined into language and books. As ranking second in the list of the great discoveries of the race, it may perhaps be truly said that the art of printing can put forth the strongest claim. As gathering up and perpetuating the force inherent in the alphabet, and in printing, perhaps the modern newspaper comes in for the third place in the list of the marvellous devices of man for the reaction of his higher ends. The religious newspaper, in all the endless variety of publications issuing from the press, easily ranks first in far reaching and uplifting influence over the human race.

Among the great multitudes of religious enterprises of our time, that of missions is the most central, most vital, constituting the very life of aggressive Christianity. Yet, as a matter of fact, there is but a segment, a mere fraction, of any of the great Protestant denominations, enlisted heart and soul in the missionary enterprise. The great need of the hour is the incorporation into the consciousness of the Christian world, the great thought of missions so revealed in Scripture. This must be done, or else the very life of Christianity is in peril. The denominational press, as a factor in accomplishing this result, cannot be over estimated. Note some of the advantages possessed by the press in bringing about the desired result:

Note first its position as leader of denominational thought. This is true in a peculiar sense under our Baptist polity. We have no bishops to formulate plans and devise methods, which are binding upon all alike. Discussion solves all problems with us, so far as they receive solution. The denominational paper, as the medium for the expression of opinion, and particularly as the guide in denominational thought, stands unrivalled as a source of influence and power.

2. As growing out of the above fact, I note also that the denominational press may be made the chief promoter of the unity among our churches. A chief Baptist peril has always been divisive tendencies. This is a result of one of our greatest distinctive principles, the Baptist doctrine of Christian liberty. It is the glory of our denomination that we have maintained this truth, and on the whole our unity of aim and purpose is remarkable. But it is only within comparatively recent times that co operation has been developed on a large scale among us in missionary enterprise. One great need, therefore, is that we shall along with our intense consciousness of liberty, develop also a consciousness of denominational unity. There is no common standing place more appropriate or exalted for the operation of the spirit of unity than in the cause of missions. Now, as a matter of course, such unity must come only in the Baptistic way; voluntary unity, "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" is the only form of unity possible or desirable to us. No form of dictation from any source whatsoever can promote it in the least degree. Personal preferences may be put aside for the common good, the spirit of love and conciliation may bring brethren together for mutual conference and helpfulness where differences exist, and a modification of view all along the line may result; but nothing save this true spirit of Christ, and Truth, can effect any permanent results. Now, the denominational paper as the general organ of denominational thought, in touch with every department of our life, and every phase of our thought, can be made a powerful bond of unity.

3. Again, the denominational press has very great advantage in this, that it reaches the leadership of the denomination. Men who think, men who exert an influence, men who powerfully mould the life of our people, are universally those who read the papers. It is an absolute, an imperative condition of leadership. Hence, through the leaders the denominational press can move the denomination even unto its utmost limits in the direction of missions.

4. It has also the power, the tremendous power of repetition. Fifty two times a year the light flashes, fifty-two times a year the memory is quickened, and the consciences stirred and the judgment convinced. Repetition is a fundamental element in all successful teaching. "Line upon line, line upon line, line upon line," this alone will bring about the desired result in an education along missionary lines. This is the point at which many pastors fail in educating their churches on missions. They do not appreciate the power of iteration. An appeal, a collection once a year, and an association of missions with an internal struggle against giving, is the experience in many churches. The quiet education when no collection is in view preparatory to the collection afterwards is the only permanently effective way. The denominational paper is here as in other things the chief ally of the pastor in advancing his work.

This fact is gradually coming to be recognized by pastors, and the progressive pastor is realizing as never before, that unless his people read the State paper his hands are tied in all his efforts to enlist his people in the general work of the denomination.

The BIBLICAL RECORDER has been strongly missionary in its spirit and teachings and will no doubt continue to be. I cannot speak a more important word in closing than this, that the prosperity of any denomination in any State is vitally connected with the prosperity of the denominational paper of that State. Support the paper, and you support every good cause.

My Dear Miss Heck:—Our dear Mrs. Burt has been sick for a week, and is still unable to write, so she requested me to do so, and tell you as much as possible about my visit to the Association.

I am sorry to say I was the only lady representative from our church and Missionary Society.

The weather was bright and balmy. We had a very pleasant trip of forty miles by rail and five through the country to the church. Such crowds of people and as many vehicles I haven't seen for many years. It is needless to say, however, that I enjoyed it all; and, indeed, every one seemed happy and in a spirit to take in the good sermon by Rev. O P. Meeks, the good speeches, spicy discussions, &c. Mr. Oliver had a ladies' meeting, and addressed them on missions, urging them to organize missionary societies in their churches. There were five or six representatives from churches without a society, and they all promised to write to you for literature, and organize societies as soon as possible They promised they would go to work for the Master with renewed energy in future. I pray God will help them put forth their very best efforts for his glory.

I am sorry I haven't a more encouraging report. However, let us pray for better things for the future. With best wishes for you and your noble work,

I am sincerely,
MRS WILL. B. OLIVER.

The Mecklenburg and Cabarrus Association.

My Dear Miss Heck:—Your letter asking that some of us go over to Concord during the Association, came some weeks ago. I did not answer because I thought I would wait until after we had been, and then write you the result of our trip.

Well, I had been sick in bed several days, and Wednesday afternoon when mamma and Mrs. Pruitt came to see me, they looked somewhat discouraged. "Oh, I'm going," I said; and so yesterday morning I got up and went. I must confess that I felt rather discouraged when on arriving at the station I found Mr. Pruitt had not gone over the day before, consequently we were not expected, and no announcement of our meeting had been made. To add to this, the train was over two hours late, which would make it after twelve o'clock when we would reach Concord. Oh, I was discouraged. Only Mrs. Pruitt and I were going, and I remarked, "Let's just put the money we would spend in our own Missionary Society and stay at home. It is too late to go now." Still we could not decide; but before the train pulled into Charlotte we had bought our tickets and were ready to go, determined to do what we could. As I said, it was after twelve when we reached Concord. Going up to the town in the 'bus we begged Mr. Alderman (pastor at Concord) to hurry to the church and announce our meeting right after the afternoon session. Still we were fearful he would be too late—that the meeting would be over. Well, after dinner we went to the church. I did not know any announcement had been made (but it had), and as time passed, and the long-winded men kept on talking, I fairly sat on pins and needles, and when the women began to leave we could stand it no longer; but Mr. Pruitt went one way and I another to stop them and beg them to wait for the missionary meeting. They really did adjourn earlier on our account, and they urged the women to remain and the men to vacate at once. We had about twenty five or thirty present. We carried out your program as nearly as possible. It was a good meeting,—better than we have at home. The women and girls took right hold and seemed ready and anxious to go to work. Well, they organized with ten members, and we saw several at night who said they, too, wanted to join. When we came to the Yates Memorial no one raised the hand to signify a willingness to give or raise one dollar, but when I said "fifty cents," several hands went up I think if you would write them on the subject you might inspire them to do more. I wish you could have been there. Such enthusiasm I never saw. It seemed as if they were hungry for just such work. And, Miss Fannie, it did us more good than it did them. Mrs Pruitt and I fairly trod the air, and I actually forgot my weak back and aching head. I know you will hear from this Society, and I trust you may meet some of the members at the Convention.

I have written a lengthy account, and I trust it will not take up too much of your valuable time reading it, but I just felt so good and so glad I did not give up when tempted to do so, I could not help telling you all about it. With love,

LUELLA LIDDELL FRANKLIN.

A Letter from Mrs. Greene.

Miss Fannie E Heck: MY DEAR SISTER:—For a long time it has been the custom in this mission for Dr. Graves to hold a class four times each year for the instruction of the male members of the churches. These brethren come to Canton from the different stations in the surrounding country. Some of the brethren attend only one or two of the classes, while others come for one or two each year. A few come to every class.

Until this year there has been no work of this kind for the sisters, except a permanent class for women connected with the girls' boarding school. Only a very small proportion of the female members of the church are able to leave their homes and families to come to Canton to study.

But to reach the women in our churches and give them the much-needed instructions has seemed, heretofore, an impossibility.

Bro. Simmons has had charge of the class work since Dr. Graves has been away. At the June class he held the night session in the mission chapel at Ng Sin Mun, and the women and girls attended. This proved so successful that Miss White decided to try a class for the sisters in September.

When the brethren came for the September class they brought their wives and small children, or near relatives, to study with the ladies of the mission. More than forty women, and a number of young girls and small children, were present. Some of the school girls took charge of the babies and small children, leaving the mothers free to study.

Misses Whilden, North, McMinn, White, and myself, filled the day with instructions in different portions of the Old and New Testament. In the evening both men and women assembled in the chapel to hear Bro. Simmons explain the gospel of John. But the best part of each day was short prayer services which the women held among themselves morning and evening, and often at noon. Nearly all the sisters took part in these services The burden of each heart seemed to be the desire to have more of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

I was struck with the eagerness with which most of these sisters seized every opportunity to pray There was no need to go to this one or that to ask if she would lead a prayer, or call each by name; but whenever an opportunity for prayer was given, one and another and another would pray a short prayer. On one or two occasions I heard as many as nine pray one after the other.

We all feel that much good was done, and hope this is only the beginning of better things.

We are all glad to hear that Dr. and Mrs. Graves, who are expected here about the middle of November, will be accompanied by Rev. and Mrs. Chambers, to join our mission. We hope to hear of others coming soon.

Mr. Greene and the three older children start on Tuesday to Shiu Hing for two weeks' country work.

We are having beautiful Indian summer weather now, the most pleasant of all the year.

Your sister, VALLIE P. GREENE.

BY REV. N. B. COBB, D. D.

There are many reasons why women should be foremost in the spread of the gospel throughout the world, and God has highly honored woman's work in the gospel record

1. The first promise of the Messiah was coupled with the name of woman. "And I will put enmity between them and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." Gen. 3: 15

"When the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his son, made of a woman, made under the law to redeem them that were under the law." Gal. 4: 4.

2. The first recorded songs of praise to Jesus, even before his birth when angels sang his praises, were raised by two women, Elizabeth and Mary. See Luke 1: 39-55.

3. The first visit of the infant Jesus to the temple, when but eight days old, was celebrated by a woman, an aged widow, who "spake of him to all that looked for redemption in Jerusalem." Luke 2: 48.

4. His first recorded announcement of his own divinity was made to a woman, his own mother, when he was but twelve years of age. Luke 2: 48.

5. After he entered upon his public ministry, and he and his twelve disciples "went throughout every city and village preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God," he was supported by the contributions of noble women, who followed him and ministered to him of their substance. Luke 8: 2-3.

6. When he went to preach the gospel to the heathen of Samaria, he presented it first to the woman at the well, and through her his Messiahship was heralded to the men of the town of Sychar.

7. As the first convert to Christ in Samaria was a woman, so the first convert to Christianity in Macedonia under the preaching of Paul and Silas was a woman named Lydia, "whose heart the Lord opened that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul." Acts 16 Women should be active in both foreign and home mission work.

8. When Jesus was led away to be crucified, and his male disciples had forsaken him and fled, "many women were there beholding afar off," and by their weeping attracted the attention and sympathy of the Master. Matt. 27: 55.

9. When he was taken down from the cross and buried, women followed to discover the place that they might suitably anoint his body. A woman had already anointed him while living with a box of costly ointment.

10. When he arose from the dead he first appeared unto certain women. It should not be a matter of wonder that the last word he addressed to any human being before his death was "mother," and the first after his resurrection was "woman."

11. After his ascension, and when the disciples were waiting for the promise of the Spirit according to his direction, noble women were present at that apostolic prayer meeting. Acts 1: 14

In the face of all these facts, what Bible reader can doubt that the Saviour regarded woman as a very important factor in the spread of the gospel throughout the world. The church or pastor that ignores woman's responsibility and power as a worker in God's kingdom is so far not Christ like.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address, Worldliness does not consist in the possession or enjoyment of the material blessings of life; it consists in making them the chief object of our regard. There may be as much worldliness in a hut as in a palace. A man who uses the world for the promotion of spiritual ends has the unworldly temper.—The Watchman.

God's Ways Are Always Best.

God's ways are always the best,
Though ofttimes they may lead
Through gloomy wilderness,
Where feet may tire and bleed,
By hunger oft and thirst sore pressed;
And yet God's ways are always best.

will find it to their advantage to get the Minutes of their Association printed by us.

We have been doing this class of work for more than twenty years, and are familiar with the proper arrangement, and with the names of the brethren, &c., and when we print them the work is not only well done, but the Minutes are correct.

It would be better for all the work if the Minutes of all the Associations were printed at one place.

Clerks will do well to send us their Minutes.

NEWS SUMMARY.

North Carolina.

The "Eastern Field Trials"—competive bird hunts to determine the supremacy of dogs owned by certain kennel men from the north—were held near Newton recently. Already the birds have been killed out of some localities by these "sportsmen."——The Winston Republican, a very able paper, has been organized into a stock company, being capitalized at $20,000. It may become a daily if the directors deem expedient.——William Brantley and David Uredle, youths murdered J. B. Bonner, of Aurora, a well-to-do merchant, last week. They were crazed with bloody stories in cheap novels. Only a few weeks ago four young men wrecked a train, killing two persons, in a mania brought on by such reading. It is a strange coincidence that a man, unknown to fame, who made a princely income by writing this kind of literature, died last week.——The work at Pinehurst, Moore county, which Mr. Tufts of Boston is having done, goes steadily forward. It is already quite a town. Every dwelling is owned by Mr. Tufts. His purpose is to make it possible for people who cannot withstand colder climate to make a living. He charges reasonable rent.——Listed value of real and personal property in Greensboro increased by $100 000 last year.——The A. M. E Zion (colored Methodist in conference in Wilmington last week proposed to raise $100,000 in 1896 in honor of the centennial zeal of the church.——The action of the Railroad Commission, putting cabbages and irish and sweet potatoes in the sixth class of freight reduces transportation one half. Apples may be shipped in the sixth class, if shipped "released" (at owner's risk) as they ought to be.——Judge Schenck of Greensboro is waging a strong battle against the lease of the N. C. Railroad by the Southern Railway. He has prepared a strong argument. The matter will go into the courts.——Wilson will issue $17,000 in bonds to establish a system of sewerage.

In General.

The Cuban situation is not changed. It is expected that the Congress of the United States, which assembles this week, will take action with regard to Cuba.——The Atlanta Exposition is said to be an assured financial success.——Alexander Dumas, the younger, a literary light of no mean position, died Nov. 27.——Nine new cardinals of the church of Rome have been created, among them Satolli, the "Apostolic" delegate of the Pope in this country.——"Rigid economy" is said to be the program of the new Congress. It is also said that the tariff will not be changed materially. We hope not.——Two new gunboats for our navy were contracted for last week.——Nov. 25 and 26 a great storm prevailed in the central States from Chicago to Louisville. Many houses, including churches, were damaged.——The telegraphic columns of the daily papers state that the Chinese have destroyed extensive holdings of the French Mission at Luih Sang. The situation of "the Powers" and Turkey is pretty much the same. It has been a critical week, but the ending of it is not reassuring to those who were hoping that the recent crisis would ensure the safety of christians (Armenians) in the Turkish empire. "The Powers" cannot agree upon a plan of action.——The report of the commission appointed to investigate the representatives of the Nicaragua canal promoters will report to Congress adversely, it is said. It has been found that the cost of the canal will be $133 000 000 instead of 70 000,000.——Two deaths in foot-ball games last week were reported.——Gold is being rapidly exported; the government reserve is below the standard.

A Remarkable Offer.

TWO QUARTERS FOR THE PRICE OF ONE.

The American Baptist Publication Society will put its periodicals to any school, not now taking them, at an introductory price of one-half the regular rates. That is to say, if any such school will send us the full price for the quarter ending March 31, 1896, we will continue the subscription without further pay until June 30, 1896.

We desire also to call attention to the reduction in price of the Advanced Quarterly and Bible Lessons, and to the fact that, beginning with January, The Baptist Teacher will have a Missionary Department. Miss Mary E. Wright, of Georgia, will report for the Southern Baptist Convention, Rev. F. S. Dobbins, for the Missionary Union, and Rev. J. W. Weddell, for the Home Mission Society. A view will thus be given of all Baptist missions, Home and Foreign, North and South.

Send orders early to nearest branch house or Philadelphia.

HE TALKS OF HEADACHES AND NERVOUSNESS AND GIVES A CURE FOR BOTH

From the Evening News, Newark, N. J.

It was the drug clerk's turn to tell a story of one of his experiences, and the reporter, expecting something good, as usual, settled himself comfortably in a chair prepared to give his undivided attention to the speaker. The latter was Henry Maier, who resides with his parents on Acqueduct Street, Newark, N. J., and who hands out medicine over the counter of Dr. Andrew F. Burkhardt's drug store at 271 Orange Street, this city.

"Perhaps I can do nothing better," he began, "than to tell you the secret of my good health. It is a story that I have told to many, recently, and as it resulted in good in each case, it may be worth your while to listen to it. To begin with, I was not always strong and robust, as I am now. Long hours of work and hard study had left me in a wretched condition. Frightful, lingering headaches found me a ready victim, and at times it was so nervous that the dropping of a pin would cause me to give a violent start, and then I would be seized with a fit of trembling that was, to put it mildly, exceedingly bothersome. Well, I began to doctor myself. Now I flatter myself that I know something of medicine; but with all my knowledge, I could find nothing that would cure those terrible headaches or put an end to my extreme nervousness. When I picked up a bottle my hand would shake as though I had the chills, and if it was a powder that I was handling I stood a good chance of sprinkling it all over these black trousers. Things went from bad to worse, and I soon realized that a man of my physical condition had better not attempt to mix any medicine.

"Try a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills,' said Dr. Burkhardt, one day; and as you know the doctor's advice is always worth following, I got the Pink Pink Pills and began to take them. Aladdin's lamp never performed the wonders of these pills. Would you believe it? Before I had taken the contents of one box my headache began to give me a day off occassionally, and soon it left me entirely. How about my nervousness? Well, the pills put an end to that with almost startling abruptness. You see I know enough about the business to appreciate the importance of following the prescribing physicians' directions and by paying strict attention to those given by Dr. Williams with each box of his Pink Pills, I was soon another fellow. Look at me now! A picture of health, eh? Well, that is what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will do for a man, or a woman either. See, I can hold this glass of water out now without spilling a drop, but I couldn't do that two months ago and—

"What is it, ma'm?" he asked as a neatly dressed woman came up to the counter. "A box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills." "Yes, ma'm, fifty cents, p'ease. Thank you."

"These Pink Pills are great things," said Mr. Maier as he turned to the reporter again, and the latter, after all he had heard, thought so too.

Dr. Williams Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists; or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., for 50c. per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

Origin of Scotland Neck Church.

In reviewing a ministry of more than thirty-five years, I find it difficult to "give the most striking example of the manifestation of the goodness of God and the power of the Spirit in the conversion of souls" which has come under my "own observation."

The greatest revolution wrought in any community by the preaching of the Gospel, that has come under my own observation I I think was the result of the revival in Clarksville, Halifax county, N. C., which led to the organization of the Baptist church in Scotland Neck in 1864. When this meeting began there was but one Baptist living in the place. A new house of worship had been erected in the village chiefly by the contributions of a wealthy gentleman who was not a member of any church in honor of the memory of his mother, and Baptist ministers were invited to come and occupy it.

The ministers and deacons meeting of the Pamlico Association convened there on Friday before the fifth Sunday in August or September, I think. (The church records ought to show) 1864, the Missionary Baptists were a new people to most of the villagers. Primitives (so called), High church Episcopalians and a few Methodist included all the religious people of the community and the unpopularity of our principles may be judged by the the fact that the only welcome the ministers received on their arrival was from two men who were overloaded with whiskey—one of them an English tailor a church of England man who invited us to his tailor's shop to wash and dust, and the other a carriage maker who asked us to his house to dinner.

The Union Meeting was fairly attended on Saturday, the ministers were entertained by Bro. John T. Lawrence who lived six miles in the country and by Mr. Colin Clark who built the house of worship. On Sunday the congregations were so large and attentive, that Elder P. D. Gold, Rev. Charles J. Nelson and I decided to remain over and have preaching on Monday if we could get a congregation. The attendance and interest on Monday encouraged us to make appointments for three services on Tuesday. On Tuesday we made appointments for Wednesday and so on. The meeting lasted forty days and forty nights. Many Episcopalians and others professed religion and were baptized. The news of the revival spread far and wide and persons came many miles to attend the preaching and to learn something of the missionary doctrines. When the meeting closed a church of forty or fifty members was constituted, nearly all of whom knew nothing of Baptist doctrines except what they learned from the preachers and the New Testament. Every member of the church, even where there were five members in one family subscribed for the BIBLICAL RECORDER. They immediately called a pastor at a salary of $1000 a year and the board of himself, his family and a horse called "Missionary."

This was the beginning of the Baptist church at Scotland Neck Elder P. D. Gold was the first pastor. Never in my knowledge did a man enter upon a pastorate that was more congenial, united and plastic. They accepted at once the Bible and the Bible only, without any sort of ecclesiastical tradition as their guide in matters of belief and practice and they accepted their pastor as one sent of God, and followed faithfully his leadership until they discovered his departure from the principles and practices which they at first received. Some of them followed him even into the camp of the Antimissionaries and the church was for some time left without an under shepherd. Since then under the arduous labors of Dr. J. D. Hufham, it has become one of the leading churches of the Baptist denomination in the State.

DIED.

RAWLINS—Little Mary Rawlins, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs E T. Rawlins of Oxford, N C., died on Friday, Nov. 15th, 1895, after a brief illness with pneumonia. She was seven years old, and a lovely, attractive child. Her disposition was so cheery, bright and winning. All her little companions were so fond of her. In the home circle she was tenderly beloved, and her death throws over the whole household the deepest sorrow. How crushed are the hearts of her father and mother at the loss of their little darling! Many sincerely sympathize with them and pray for them in their affliction. May the merciful Saviour comfort them!

A FRIEND.

MINTON—After lingering several months, Mrs. Sallie Minton sweetly passed into rest in her sixty-second year. Sister Minton became a Christian in early life, and died in the fellowship of Aulander Baptist church, October 16th, 1895. She leaves a son and daughter, a son-in-law and three grandchildren to mourn their loss. Funeral by her pastor. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

L. M. CURTIS.

FEREBEE—Wiley Grandy Ferebee was born in Camden county, N. C., January 21st, 1858, and died October 16th, 1895, the triumphant death of a Christian. He was educated at Wake Forest College, where he graduated with the degree of A. B. in 1880.

He contemplated the study of the law, in which profession his quick perception and fine business qualities would have made him distinguished, but the death of his father threw upon him the responsibility and care of his mother and family. The ability exhibited in these grave duties by one so young and inexperienced, amazed his friends and neighbors. Here began the useful, busy, self-sacrificing life which marked his career. He was a conscientious, zealous, active, and influential member of Sawyer's Creek church, a church distinguished in the denomination for its great liberality and self-sacrificing spirit. He was for a long time its treasurer, and for twelve years—at different times—he was superintendent of the Sunday-school, which is known throughout the Chowan Association for its usefulness.

He was always ready to spend and be spent for every good cause, and whenever the church door was open he was there ready by his energetic spirit to encourage his brethren to greater deeds of usefulness and sacrifice. His ability was not simply in planning for the work, but in execution—able to bring things to pass. He was ever hopeful, and inspired hope in others. How sadly will Sawyer's Creek miss Wiley Ferebee!

He was made a trustee of the Chowan Baptist Female Institute in 1888. Its success and usefulness were close to his heart, and his fellow laborers can testify to his earnest and untiring efforts to sustain and build it up in the hearts of the people in that section of the State.

He was an Odd Fellow whom his brethren delighted to honor, and was frequently their representative in the annual meetings of the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows. But the greatest, the best and loveliest side of his life was exhibited to those who were nearest and dearest to him, of these relations so tender, so fond and so true, we cannot permit ourselves to write.

He was married in 1888 to Miss Blanche Boushall, the daughter of T. B. Boushall, Esq., of Camden county. She with two children survive him. He loved his family devotedly, and planned their every comfort. May God in his infinite mercy comfort and bless them.

The funeral was held from the church of his love, and was conducted by Rev. T. G. Wood, his pastor, assisted by Dr. Overby, and Dr. Blackwell of Elizabeth City. The interment was made at the family graveyard, conducted by the Odd Fellows. The esteem in which he was held was testified by the vast concourse of people who gathered to participate in the last sad rites.

Straws show which way the wind blows

Watch them—and be convinced.

When you see all sorts of washing powders patterned after Pearline; when you see it imitated in appearance, in name, in everything except merit; when you find three persons using Pearline where two used it a year ago; when you hear it as a household word with the best housekeepers; when you find its former enemies now its staunchest friends;—then you may know the wind is taking you along toward Pearline.

Why not go with it?. You are losing money by trying to head the other way; money, and labor, and time and patience. Go with the rest—use Pearline—and you stop losing, and begin to gain. Millions realize that there is everything to gain and nothing to lose—with Pearline.

How Much is he Worth?

How much is he worth? Let them tell us who can,
Not the sum of his gold, but the worth of the man,
To the world of living men.
'Tis the wealth of the mind; 'tis the heart in the breast.
'Tis the goodness that blesses and is blest.
A millionaire! What then?

How much is he worth! Let them tell us who can.
There's less in the purse, but there's more in the man
To count in the world of men.
For he holds the most precious thing possessed;
He's wealth in his mind; he's heart in his breast,
And the love of the hearts that his love has blessed.
Humble and poor! What then!

How much is he worth? Let death declare
With his touch of peace on the brow of care,
And the kind heart hushed to sleep.
There's rest at last for the toiling hand;
But the seed it dropped in the fruitful land
Hath harvests measureless as the sand
On the shores of the infinite deep.

How much is he worth? Let the angels declare
The worth to heaven of its chosen heir,
To God of his saintly men;
A life with fragrant memories fraught;
A soul resplendent with good deeds wrought;
A victor and king to the crowning brought
In the palace of God! And then?

One Girl's Room.

One girl, whose love of the beautiful is great, but whose purse is not correspondingly heavy, has furnished her room so prettily that the observer would scarcely guess how inexpensively it has all been done. She had a set of ordinary painted cottage furniture. Having plenty of time at her disposal, she scraped with sandpaper all the old paint from the bed, bureau, washstand, and three chairs. These she painted herself with white enamel paint. It was not a small task, but she accepted no assistance. The village carpenter made her a set of smooth pine book shelves, which she treated as she had done the rest of her furniture. The floor she covered with white matting, and in front of her bureau she laid a white fur rug, bought at a Japanese shop in New York for two dollars and a half. At the two windows were white scrim sash curtains, and on the side toward the room hung yellow denim portieres at thirty-five cents a yard. On these, about a foot from the floor, was outlined a row of fleurs de lis in white rope silk. On the walls was a cheap white paper with a tiny gilt figure. The only pictures were several simple engravings in white gilt frames. These frames were made of plain pine, "flowed" with glue, and then sprinkled thickly with rice. When this was perfectly dry and firm, the frames were carefully covered with gold paint. The effect was very pretty. The bureau scarf and the scarf on the tiny stand were of white momie cloth worked with yellow silk. The pincushion was yellow, covered with white lace, and mouchoir and glove cases were yellow and white. A light Japanese screen in pale gold color concealed the washstand from view. The toilet set on this same stand was not an expensive one, but its design was of yellow flowers on a white ground, and thus carried out the prevailing idea of the room.

There was an opening fireplace in this apartment, and the plain mantel was painted white. On the hearth stood a pair of brass andirons, but on the day that I was there the fireplace was filled with a great bunch of golden rod. A low ottoman, on which were piled several cushions covered with yellow India silk, stood at one corner of the hearth. The whole apartment had about it a look of purity and freshness that was delightful. It reminded one irresistibly of the chamber "looking toward the East whose name was Peace."

Of course, all this furnishing took time and trouble, but it cost little, and many young girls have so much more time than money that they could well afford to spend their unoccupied hours in transforming their rooms. I doubt whether a professional decorator could have pleased this girl as well."—Harper's Bazar.

Opportunity.

Opportunity is bald behind, and must be grasped by the forelock. Life is full of tragic might-have-beens. No regret, no remorse, no self-accusation, no clear recognition that I was a fool, will avail one jot. The time for ploughing is past; you cannot stick the share into the ground when you should be wielding the sickle. "Too late" is the saddest of human words. And, as the stages of our lives roll on, unless each is filled, as it passes, with the discharge of the duties and the appropriation of the benefits which it brings, then, to all eternity, that moment will never return, and the sluggard may beg in harvest that he may have the chance to plough once more, and have none. The student who has spent the term in indolence, perhaps dissipation, has no time to get up his subject when he is in the examination room, with the paper before him. And life and nature and God's law are stern taskmasters, and demand that the duty shall be done in its season or left undone forever.—Alexander Maclaren, D. D.

Do Something to Stop It.

Common sense tells us that when we would arrest an evil we can do it with least expenditure of energy by stopping the stream at its source. The reformation of one individual is worth any effort, but all humanity may profit if we attack, instead, the evil which has wrought his downfall. At the national meeting of the women's Christian Union, at Philadelphia, one of the members told the story of an unhappy mother, a wealthy woman, who wished to send a message to her son in prison.

Said the speaker: "She handed me a picture and told me to show it to him. I said: 'This is not your picture!'

"'Yes,' she said, 'that is mine before he went to prison; and here is one taken after I had had five years of waiting for Charley.'

"I went with those two pictures to the prison. I called at an opportune time. He was in the dark cell. The keeper said he had been in there twenty-four hours; but, in answer to my pleadings, he went into that cark cell, and the man announced a lady as from his mother. There was no reply.

"'Let me step in,' I said; and I did so.

"There was just a single plank from one end to the other, and that was all the furniture; and there the boy from Yale College sat.

"Said I: 'Charley, I am a stranger to you, but I have come from your mother, and I shall have to go back and tell her that you did not want to hear from her.'

"'Don't mention my mother's name here,' he said. 'I will do anything if you will go.'

"As he walked along the cell, I noticed that he reeled. Said I: 'What is the matter'

"He said he hadn't eaten anything in twenty-four hours.

"They brought him something; and I sat down by him and held the tin plate on which was some coarse brown bread without any butter, and, I think, a tin cup of coffee. By and by, as we talked, I pressed into his hand his mother's picture; and he looked at it and said: 'That is my mother. I always said she was the handsomest woman in the world.'

"He pressed it and held it in his hands, and I slipped the other picture over it

"'Who is that?' he asked.

"'That is your mother.'

"'Yes; that is the mother of the boy I found in a dark cell, after she had been waiting five years to see him.'

"'O God,' he cried, 'I have done it! No, it is the liquor traffic that has done it. Why don't you do something to stop it?'"—Christian Mirror.

Character.

The formation of character is much like the work of an artist in stone. The sculptor takes a rough, unshapen mass of marble, and, with strong, rapid strokes of mallet and chisel, quickly brings into view the rude outline of his design; but after the outline appears, then come hours, days, perhaps even years, of patient, minute labor. A novice might see no change in the statue from one day to the other; for, though the chisel touches the stone a thousand times, it touches as lightly as the fall of a raindrop, but each touch leaves a mark.

A friend of Michael Angelo called on the great artist while he was finishing a statue; some days afterward he called again, and the sculptor was still at the same task. The friend, looking at the statue, exclaimed: "Have you been idle since I saw you last?"

"By no means," said Angelo. "I have retouched this part, and polished that; I have softened this feature, and brought out this muscle; I have given more expression to this lip, and more energy to this limb."

"Well, well!" said his friend, "all these are trifles."

"It may be so," replied Angelo; but recollect that trifles make perfection, and that perfection is no trifle."

So it is with the shaping of character; each day brings us under the play of innumerable little influences. Every one of these influences does its work for good or ill, and all do their work through our consent. By and by appears the full and final result.—Selected.

"Among the many testimonials which I see in regard to certain medicines performing cures, cleansing the blood, etc., none impress me more than my own case, and I conscientiously believe it to be my duty to let people know it. Twenty years ago, at the age of 18 years, I had swellings on my legs, which broke and became running sores. Our family physician could do me no good, and it was feared that the bones would be affected. At last, my good old mother urged me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I took three bottles, the sores healed, and I have not been troubled since. Only the scars remain, and the memory of the past, to remind me of the good Ayer's Sarsaparilla has done me. I now weigh two hundred and twenty pounds, and am in the best of health. "WHAT MAY WE EXPECT FROM STATE AND GENERAL ORGANIZATIONS?"

BY REV. R. VANDEVENTER.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I am very glad to give you my views on the subject of State and general organization of the young people.

Better results will be attained. The most satisfactory results will not be gained by the local society alone, any more than the best results in State Missions can be gained by the local church without a State Mission Board or Convention. "Organization is the arranging of parts for the performance of the functions of life." Now there is young life, with all its possibilities, in our churches to be brought into exercise. Forces abound that need to be utilized for Christ. To help put these forces into shape for service, is the aim of this movement. Because this is the aim, many who are no longer youths, but who see the need, are leading in this work. The question of organizations is not to make life, but to use the life that is now unused. Speed the day when we shall have organization sufficient to this end!

A basis of operation is what we need: a means by which we can accomplish the most with what we have. I find the local unions—and we have many of them; they have multiplied this year—have no common plan, but each society is working its own line. More efficient work could be done if there were a general plan of operation. Some of the societies are devotional, some attempt little besides missionary work, a few undertake literary work, and still a few social work. It seems to me we need organization to put us in shape to try every desirable feature of this movement that seems to promise better service. The organization of our State Convention has done great things toward putting the churches in touch with all the work to be done in our State and out of it. Why may we not reasonably expect similar results from the organization of a State Young People's Union?

A quickened interest among the young people.—It is all right to be interested in the youth; it is also most desirable that the youth shall be interested. Whenever a State has organized the young people for work, there has been quickened life. At a recent Association in Virginia an hour was given to young people's work, and the influence of the meeting was felt all over the territory. The feeling was that six or seven local unions would be organized at once.

In the South "a city Union was organized, which greatly added to the power of the Baptist young people." In a State that has "State Organization," a local society "is enthusiastic in raising money for denominational work, as well as growing in spiritual graces."

A conservative brother in the South attended the "International Union" in Baltimore, and said: "We need organization, we need to know more of training for service for Christ."

Organization of a Southern Union will multiply State organizations, and State organizations will multiply local unions.—We have already some States organized, and many local societies; but the history of the movement shows that general organization has been followed by State, and State by local organization. Just as the organization of the State Convention has quickened the work in every department, and churches have sprung into existence all over the territory.

There are characteristics, vital to Southern Baptists, that must be preserved.—With a National Young People's Convention near us, and in our midst, which does not oppose a policy which we believe to be contrary to Scripture, and to our views of social life, we cannot afford to disregard this question any longer.

The work of Southern Baptists should be kept prominently before our young people.—As excellent as is the 'Conquest Course," provided by the Baptist Union, it does not meet the needs of the people. We ought to know all that, and we must know more about our work than the Union can tell us.

From January, 1895, until the present, in the missionary cause of the Baptist Union, the work of the Southern Baptist Convention has been superficially treated about half a dozen times. I am not saying that is not a proportional part, but that is not sufficient to meet the needs of our people. I believe we should not confine our teaching to the missions of our Convention, but we should make them more prominent than any other. Everybody who has attended the International Union must admit the many attractions, and that the attraction is strong enough to hold those who come under its influence. If our young people become attached to it, they will continue loyal, and where, will be the sympathy and co operation of the "men and women of to morrow?"

Let us have a Southern and State organization.

Burlington, N. C.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK AGAIN.

BY REV. H. A. BROWN, D. D.

There is no doubt that the future progress of the Baptist people in the South, and the perpetuity of the principles and practices of the fathers depend upon the training of the young people. It is the duty of the Church to do more for the young people than simply conduct a Sunday School for the children, and hold an annual protracted meeting to increase its membership. The necessity for teaching and training on the part of the Churches has been overlooked too much and too long by many of our Baptist people. We need not lessen our zeal for the salvation of the people and the securing of members for our churches, but we do sadly need that these members become a trained army, an aggressive force, a Gideon's band, going on conquering and to conquer.

How shall this training be given? It is a question of method. The church should select such methods as it thinks best, considering the conditions that exist in the community where it is located. There may be some churches that do not need any special agency. Let such churches be congratulated. Each church must decide the question for itself. I am a thorough believer in organization in the local churches for mission work, for Sunday School work, and for training in Scripture teaching, denominational history. What great work has been accomplished anywhere without organization? But some one says the church is sufficient. Of course, but the church must organize its forces for work, or it will not be sufficient. Our anti-mission brethren have been crying for fifty years that the church is sufficient, and have not organized for mission work, or Sunday school work, or any aggressive warfare against ignorance and sin.

Every Young People's Meeting should be under the direction of the church, and conducted as a part of the work of the church. It should be as much a department of church work as Sunday school work, mission work, caring for the poor, or looking after pastoral support. There is much emptiness and inconsistency in saying that the church is sufficient, while at the same time opposing the very agencies and instruments by which the churches are to do their God-given work. If organization is necessary in carrying on the work in our local churches, why may not a larger organization be helpful in the general work? Our fathers felt the need of this, and organized for mission work and Sunday school work. Why should not the Southern Baptist Convention provide an agency for the teaching and training of our young people, as for missionary and Sunday school work? Why should we turn over this work to a national organization any more than our mission and Sunday school work? Why talk about sectionalism and the dead issues of the war, just because some of us think it best to do our work through our own agencies?

There are many troublesome questions which may be eliminated by doing our own work, through agencies of own appointment. The great mass-meetings of the B. Y. P. U. of America, held in our large cities each year, may do much towards generating a certain kind of enthusiasm, but more than this sort of enthusiasm is needful to do the work which ought to be done. Organization under control of the Southern Baptist Convention, with definite arrangements for courses of instruction along the lines of our views of doctrine, are denominational history and practices, and our methods of work will bring to us, in due course of time, the most desirable results.

THE DEAD LINE IN THE MINISTRY.

BY REV. HIGHT C. MOORE.

Three facts concerning the dead line in the ministry merit consideration: First, it is often imaginary, sometimes real; second, the minister himself is responsible for its existence; third, the path of duty never crosses it.

It is often said that a minister has crossed the dead line when he may be on the very summit of Heaven directed labor. Hence, the rubbish of popular misconception first needs brushing aside.

Manifestly, it is not the line of age. The narrow sentiment which would reject a man before twenty-five and retire him at fifty, is clearly erratic.

Nor of apparent failure. False standards of success may shelve a minister long before his work under God is complete.

Nor of unpopularity. John Foster said he was never asked twice to occupy the same pulpit; yet, as Dr. Parker observes, "Who will deny that John Foster was an able minister of the New Testament?"

Nor of physical disability. Paul had the hindering "thorn in the flesh." Richard Baxter preached powerfully when he could scarcely rise before his audience. Robert Hall fought against great physical odds, and became the "Demosthenes of the modern pulpit."

Neither is it the line of necessary ignorance. Unquestionably, many illiterate men have been called to perform special work, and have done it with thrilling success.

Nor yet of unrhetorical preaching. Faults in gesticulation, lingual peculiarities, natural eccentricities of manner and rugged terms of expression have all been found in faithful and effective ministers.

On the other hand, all the causes of ministerial death are to be found in the minister's own heart. Streams of blessing cannot issue from a frozen fountain. One can never expect a rich harvest from the untilled soil of his soul. A petrified spirituality in the preacher's bosom can never generate a holy contagion among his people. Here, and here only, is the Alpha and Omega of the clergyman's failure to meet the true end of his calling.

This spiritual frigidity begets a hostile brood which waylays the minister's path, to rob him of his influence and usefulness, to leave him bruised, bleeding and forsaken by the wayside.

There is indolence. This undermines on all sides the preacher's fertility. His life is a dream, his pastoral work a drudgery, and his sermons are like old bread—"hard to cut, harder to eat, and hardest of all to digest."

There is formality. His people gather about him like shivering pilgrims about the glowing hearth; sad indeed, if the expected blaze turns out to be only the sparkle and glitter of iciness.

There is also self-conceit. Some preachers are like the early English author, whose manuscript was refused by a London publisher because there were not enough capital I's in his office to print it—their egotism unfits them for ordinary use.

Disloyalty to the truth, however popular, is infallibly fatal. Mixing truth with error is manufacturing sweet poison, and the heterodox preacher who does it whets the blade for his own throat.

In many other ways, according to ministerial temperament and environment, the dead line becomes manifest, but in every case it diverges from a cold, barren, apathetic heart.

Then it is clear, that crossing the dead line is an act of the preacher's will, and not the decree of a merciless fate. If he will only follow it, the mariner's course lies far enough from the angry rocks and treacherous shoals. It was not the rough path of duty, but the easier way beyond the stile which led the pilgrims into the clutches of giant despair. The minister who yields to carnal charms, and heeds the fickle din of popular opinion, and wavers before every wind of doctrine, either has already crossed the dead line, or is dangerously near its dark borders. But for the true, faithful minister, who, eagle-eyed and lion-hearted, seeks truth to defend it, and detects error to crush it—for him there is not, there can never be, a dead line.

About fifteen minutes of that speech you are going to make will be heartily enjoyed—but no more, unless it is "the effort of your life." Anyone would rather hear half a dozen fifteen minute speeches than one of thirty minutes.

BASIC IDEAS IN THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MOVEMENT.

BY REV. CALVIN S. BLACKWELL.

It has just dawned upon the young people of this generation that it doesn't take much of a man to be a Christian, but that it takes all there is of him. Born of this conviction is a burning desire to make out of themselves the utmost for God and humanity. But one out of every hundred can ever hope to get a college training, hence the other ninety-nine are shut up to self-culture at home, or no culture at all. Therefore the wonderful success of the University Extension work, the "Chautauquan Circles," the "Epworth League Lessons," the "Endevor Topics," and the "Christian Culture Courses." These are the responses to the cry of the ninety-nine for head and heart food.

There is a mighty reaction from the lower grade of vicious literature by the vast middle strata of the well disposed youth of the land.

A few years ago "flash-fiction" or "goody-goody" books was about the only mental and soul food placed within easy reach of the young people. The one was generally naughty, and the other usually nauseating. Outside of the Bible itself, all of God's "goodness, sweetness and light" was locked up in ponderous tomes, and theological text books,

The Young People's Movement has for its basic idea the placing of religio-historic facts, theological thought, and pure Bible truth with in easy reach, and in popular form, for the use of young people who are denied college training, and are busy making a living, but whose hearts are hungry.

Their heart hunger is creating a tremendous demand. These sheep of the Lord must be fed. To do this best, some sort of local and general organizations are necessary, as the demand and grade of work is above the average Sunday School work. The real work of the Young People lies between the pulpit and the Sunday School teacher's desk.

A philosopher said, "a hungry stomach is the motive power of civilization." This heart-hunger of the young people has put in motion the Young People's Movement, and it is this power that will push it with increasing force far into the future. To supply this heart hunger with wholesome food, is the hope and work of the movement.

Young people are generally eager to learn. It is as easy to learn good things as bad ones. When they are set to work learning the history and dramatic incidents of our denomination; when they begin to see, through the "Christian Culture Courses," how Bible truths and Baptist triumphs have gone hand in hand, since the days when John preached on the banks of the Jordan, a new and mighty power will be felt in our church life. Then pastors will not be under the necessity of turning out about as many for dancing in the winter as they baptized during the summer.

There's but little room for the devil in busy hearts. To stand in the pulpit and thunder the "thou-shalt-nots" at the young people, is not according to Christ's teaching, when he told Peter not to "flog" but to "feed" his lambs, lambkins and sheep. Many of our pastors in the past have followed the example of some mothers, who wash and dress their children, set them on chairs, where their feet cannot touch the floor, and bid them "keep still."

"But the saucy little boy
Who had no toy
Did not know what to do;
So he rumpled his frock
And tore his sock,
And tried to eat up his shoe."

But the wiser editors and pastors of the future, will put into the hands of the young people the Christian Culture Courses, that they may be kept busy getting good and doing good. When this is done, the young people will have little desire or time to rumple their frocks, tear their socks, or kick out their shoes in sinful frolics.

This, in brief, is the basic idea, the plans for practical work, and the future prospects of the Young People's Movement, as far as I have been able to learn from the leaders and literature of the movement.

Shall we, of North Carolina, encourage the work? Is there a place for it to do good among us? Wherever it is faithfully tried the young people and the churches are helped, and the knowledge of God's truth is spread abroad. A more skilled and robust set of young people, with a better knowledge of the Bible and more loyalty to the Church, are growing up where the movement is being practically tested. Shall we try it?

THE BAPTIST FEMALE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA.

BY SECRETARY STRINGFIELD.

God be praised! The establishment of this great school is no longer regarded "a forlorn hope," but an assured fact. A child of the Baptist State Convention, as it is, need not hope to have an existence except through great struggles and sacrifices. So far, its history is filled with painful anxieties; and for this and many other reasons, has a right to claim kinship with the other honored children of the Convention Locating the school was a matter of very great interest, and much feeling was stirred in the matter which might have been avoided, but which has not materially damaged the work. Under God, it has passed successfully through every attempt that has been made to side-track it, and, today there is not an institution in the State that is the recipient of greater anxieties and sacrifices. Our people over the State hail with joy the day we can offer to our young women the advantages of an endowed institution, owned and controlled by the Baptists of the State. The growth of this Institution has, of necessity, been slow, but great encouragement has been received from the fact that progress has been seen in the work from its beginning. At times we have felt impatient, as we have so clearly seen the immediate necessity for the school. Our Baptist boys who are in college may be found at our own Wake Forest, while our Baptist girls, who are in college, are scattered over six States, in twenty colleges and seminaries, and only five of these schools Baptist institutions. Our boys are at Wake Forest College breathing an atmosphere wholesome to the perpetuity of Baptist principles, while our girls, for the most part, are breathing an atmosphere destructive to every principle we hold dear.

Again, we are offering our boys all sorts of advantages, and urging them to accept the kindness, while we deny our girls equal advantages, and urge only those to attend college who are able to pay the necessary expense. Be it said in honor of a few men, whose names we have in mind, that they have been doing what they could in aiding young women in the prosecution of studies at colleges.

We have for our boys an institution greater than its president, greater than its teachers—an institution that has to its back one hundred and fifty thousand Baptists in the State, with over two hundred thousand dollars so invested that every boy who attends Wake Forest College has to his credit each month, at least, ten dollars, while we have not two hundred cents invested to the credit of our young women, and, certainly, not an institution having the Baptist denomination to its back. When we consider the advantages outside the teachers, that may be enjoyed at a great denominational college, we can no longer deny this blessing to our young women, who are as truly factors in our denominational life as are our young men.

In view of these and many other facts, which pertain to our denominational life in the education of our young women, we urge still greater enthusiasm on the part of our people in making their subscriptions as large as possible, to be paid in the near future; and we earnestly ask that our people make larger donations in their wills; and in this Godly way administer on their estates before they go to give an account of their stewardship.

In behalf of the Board of Trustees, I extend most hearty thanks to our people for the substantial aid and other encouragement given so cheerfully to this work.

NEED OF SEMINARY MEN IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. B. W. SPILMAN.

It may be a question, in the minds of some of our Baptist people, as to whether we need more Seminary Men in North Carolina. Is there not a danger of educating our ministry away from the masses of the people? We need Godly men, of all grades of culture, to fill our pulpits. It is as great a mistake to place a highly cultured man, who cannot adapt himself to his surroundings, in a position to preach to the unlearned, as it is to place a very ignorant preacher, no matter how pious, to preach to a highly cultured audience. Dr. Broadus could charm and instruct an audience of college presidents or a group of rough backwoodsmen. Every man has not that power. We need men of every grade, because we have in our State hearers of every grade. But I speak of one class—the men who have had Seminary training. Do we need them?

I take it for granted that a Seminary training makes a man a better preacher. Then we need them, because it will raise the standard of our preaching. Our people are becoming a factor in the towns and cities. Our strength was once almost entirely in the country. This calls for an educated ministry. The Presbyterians and Episcopalians are in the towns of the State. Their ministers are educated men. If we expect to hold our own, we must have men of the highest training.

The general educational revival calls for trained men. A man, to interest you, must know more about his subject than you do. Our people are awaking to the importance of education. Look at the growth of our State University, the Agricultural and Mechanical College, the Normal and Industrial, and the increased patronage of our denominational colleges, and the host of academies and high schools, sending out every year an increasingly large number of educated men and women. The day of the self-made doctor or lawyer is past. God can take any man of good sense and make a preacher of him, but he can make a better preacher by thorough special training. We must have trained men, or the pew will get ahead of the pulpit.

The rapidity of the movements in every phase of modern life calls for Seminary men.

In this busy age we must be up and doing. The world needs the very best that is in men. Life is too short to waste any of it. We can not afford to spend ten years in gaining what may be gained in two or three.

A look into the future will emphasize the need of Seminary Men in North Carolina. The forces already on the ground call for trained men. The Disciples of Christ have gained a foothold in the east and are spreading. The Adventist is putting in an appearance. The Mormon, with his immersion, is already here. These men have a keen scent for a Baptist and are shrewd-debaters.

What of the future? We now have no cities, few Romanists (fewer than any State), few foreigners. There are an hundred and three religious bodies in the United States that have no organization in North Carolina. As yet, we disturb ourselves little about the Catholic, the Mormon, the Christian Scientist, the Spiritualist, the Swedenborgian, and a hundred others with every kind of "ism" from anarchism down. But the tide of immigration is already setting our way. If we would hold our own against this incoming mass of humanity, we must have men of the highest training—men who not only hold our doctrines, but men who can state them clearly and give a reason for their faith.

One more reason why we need Seminary Men, is for the sake of the rising ministry and the churches. Every Seminary Man is an advocate of Seminary training. He urges the young preacher to attend a Seminary, if possible, and if not, to pursue the studies alone as best he can. Others may do this; a Seminary man is sure to do it. So, he will help young preachers.

Other advantages being equal, he is better prepared to develop a church than a man who has never had Seminary training. Our Baptist churches in North Carolina are, many of them, sadly in need of development.

ASSOCIATIONAL SCHOOLS.

BY REV. LIVINGSTON JOHNSON.

There seems to be a universal feeling among the Baptists, throughout the State, that we should provide better facilities for the education of the masses of our people. At many of the Associations steps were taken looking to the establishment of Associational Schools. In some Associations such schools have already been established, and in a few places they have been in successful operation for many years. This is a most hopeful indication. It shows that the Baptists are anxious to have their children educated; and, further, that they want them educated under Baptist influence.

Let us notice a few reasons why we should establish Associational Schools:

1. They can do better work than the ordinary local or neighborhood school. The reason for this is very obvious; it reaches over a wider area and commands a larger patronage. The time was when the citizens of a community, irrespective of denomination, would unite, employ a teacher, and loyally support him. At those schools boys and girls could be well prepared for college. But times have changed, and such schools as the above are the rare exception. An undenominational school starts up in a community. In a short time the members of one denomination think they are not sufficiently represented in the teaching force. A split ensues, which results in the establishment of two feeble schools, both of which soon gasp and die. We are not prepared to say that this is due to a spirit of narrowness, but rather to an appreciation of the importance of having our children trained under proper influence. The present system of two or three months public school is a little better than no school at all, but that is about all that can be said of it. So, in many sections, the Associational School is a matter of necessity. Located at some central point in an Association, where board is cheap, it will draw patronage from all over the Association, and will afford many boys and girls opportunities that they could not otherwise enjoy. Another advantage these schools have is, that there is a moral atmosphere surrounding them not found in the common "old field school." The Bible may not be taught as a text book and no ironclad code of morals enforced; but the very fact that the institution is under the control of a religious denomination, gives to it a moral tone that it would not otherwise have.

2. Another reason for the establishment of such schools, which has already been hinted at, is that they add greatly to our strength and influence as a denomination. Wherever Baptists have planted and maintained Associational Schools, our principles have become deeply rooted, and the truth which we hold, firmly established. This is not because our distinctive doctrines are taught, but because a heathful Baptist atmosphere pervades the whole institution, causing the students to grow into strong and stalwart Baptists, rooted and grounded in the faith. We need young men and women of conviction, who believe something, and not a set of "namby-pamby" young people, who are so "broad-guaged" that they think it an indication of narrowness to say that they believe in immersion and restricted communion. The influence of a Baptist school in any Association cannot be estimated. It commands the respect of other denominations and gives us prestige that would be hard to gain in any other way. Many of our young people who will never go to college, will even be denied good academic education, unless it will be supplied by Baptist schools established for the purpose. A well equipped school in every Association would mean more for the Baptists of North Carolina than anything that has occurred since Wake Forest College was born, amid the prayers and tears and sacrifices of our fathers.

3. This leads to a third reason to be given, viz., that Associational Schools will act as feeders to Wake Forest and the Baptist female schools of the State. This fact is practically demonstrated by the number of students now at Wake Forest from Associations where Baptist schools exist. The Christian colleges of the State should be at the head of a system of Christian education, each for its own denomination, just as the University is so often called the "head of the public school system of North Carolina." If such were the case, it would be a long step toward the settlement of the educational question in our State.

Now, is all this practicable? We think so. Building and equipping a suitable house is the main expense. Of course a little endowment fund would be better; but without that an Associational School can be successfully conducted. Any Association in the State, no matter how weak, can build and equip a house that will answer the purpose, if they make a united effort. Some years ago a brother left part of his estate, to be used in founding and sustaining a school in a certain Association in the State. The property left was not turned into money until quite recently, but it acted as a stimulus, and the brethren erected and equipped a building at a cost of some five thousand dollars. Without the prospect of the bequest, not a brick would have been put on the ground until this day, perhaps; and yet the work was practically done by the voluntary contributions of the churches and individuals in the Association. Some one is ready to say, "we can't attempt such an expensive building as that." Well, it isn't necessary. Take another case: In another community in this State, the brethren, a few years ago, determined to have a school. They had no house, and were not able to have one built. When they "laid by" their crops, they cut logs, hauled them to a saw mill, had them sawed, and built the house themselves. They have an excellent house with an outlay of very little cash.

Another difficulty arises: How about those who do not live within reach of the school, and are not able to pay board? The "club house" is the solution of that difficulty. The students can go home Saturday night; come Monday morning, bring their rations, do their own cooking, and live about as cheaply as they could at home.

The principal of a Baptist school informed the writer that the cash expenditure of some young men, who boarded as above, was two dollars per month, each, including room rent.

Yes, by all means let us have the Associational Schools!

FACTORY POPULATION—A FIELD FOR MISSION WORK.

The South is destined to become an important and interesting manufacturing section, especially the Piedmont district. Many Southern cities are putting on new life, and new towns are springing up on the banks of our rivers at the hum and music of the spindle. The manufacture of cotton in the South is now commanding the attention and wealth of the nation. The Industrial Record, of Boston, in its recent report of the proceedings of the Cotton Manufacturers' Association held in Atlanta, and speaking of the South, said:

"The grand possibilties of the Piedmont district must have favorably impressed the visiting manufacturers from the North. All that it needs is time, population and wealth. With these, it will soon become one of the most attractive parts of the country. Its roads will then be put in good condition for travel, and its towns will be filled with attractive buildings. Its topography is, in many respects, unequalled, and its climate delightful."

Such are the words of, and such is the impression made upon Northern capitalists. They are impressed more and more that the war is over, and that the people, both North and South, can enjoy fellowship in the various industries of the two sections. Then many of our Southern capitalists are already awakened to the spirit of the age, and time and money are being expended in building cotton mills and in establishing varied industries in many parts of the country.

With our great delight at such an onward movement, let us not forget that we live in North Carolina, one of the bright places in the realm of Southern prosperity. There are many places in the State now that are asserting their importance in the galaxy of enterprising cities. North Carolina is coming to the front as a manufacturing centre, which is clearly indicated by the rapid increase of factories in the last five or ten years. If such a tendency is not delayed in its onward course, there will be a change in the complexion and character of our people. Such a change will bring with it a new order of life, new habits, a new regime, new associations, and will shift the population from one of homogeneousness and agriculture to one of industry and "foreign mixture—this mean problems."

With the hand writing on the wall, I inquire if such a population does not and will not furnish an important and inviting field for State Mission work? I used to think that the time would soon come when the Board of Missions would finish its work, having occupied all the territory from the mountains to the sea coast; but the field seems to be growing larger, riper and whiter for harvest every year. In the first place, the factory population is a great field for the Baptists, because they love to preach the gospel to the poor. In this they follow the example of the Master, who delighted in preaching to the poor. They pressed near His side to hear His loving and tender words of salvation; and He was glad to have them touch the hem of His garment, and to have the common people hear Him gladly. He came to save the poor as well as the rich. But for the Baptists (and the Methodists have done well), I do not know what the poor and country people would have done, or what would have become of them, worldly and spiritually. The Baptists, especially, have gone from house to house, and into the many homes of the country, and have planted the principles of the Bible. Now that hundreds and thousands of these people, chiefly tenants, are leaving their quiet country homes and are seeking employment in the towns and cities, is it not wise, for the salvation of souls and for the glory of God, that the missionary spirit of the Baptists of the State be felt among them? Hitherto, this class has been neglected in some of our cities, because they have been regarded as the "poor ignorant factory set," and add nothing to the social and financial standing of the church. I thank God, the Baptists have never drawn the line between the poor and the rich, but have gone forth preaching—"There is no difference." The factory population, as a class, are poor, and are likely to remain so, while some of them by the spirit of energy, industry and economy, rise to the positions of superintendents, stockholders, owners, and to other places of prominence.

Secondly, the present tendency of manufacturing in the South and in the State is toward the formation of a population of "foreign mixture." In these times of railroads, steamboats, and quick transit, it is an easy matter for the nationalities of the world to settle in one community. The world is rapidly becoming one great city, with the oceans and railroads, the boulevards and streets as ways of transportation.

In this blending together of the races of the earth, is there not something foretold, which should arouse the missionary spirit of our people? Such a mixed population, with its issues and diverse conceptions of Christianity, will be good ground for the preacher and the missionary to cultivate. I believe that a special work should begin now, in the very incipiency of this movement from an agricultural to an industrial life.

Any delay will be a loss of time, and will threaten the moral and spiritual welfare of the factory people. If the Baptists do not make haste, the other denominations will go in and possess the land. They are anxious to do it; they have the means and men to do it. The way to settle a difficult problem, with which Baptists may be confronted in the near future, is to begin in the infancy of this new and mixed population. The Baptists of North Carolina are now being invited to enter an open door of usefulness. There never was such a demand for men and money. The growing towns and cities are laying claims to the Baptists and to Baptist principles. Let us enter these centers of influence, wealth and population with a boldness and faithfulness that becometh the servants of God. We are strong in the country, we ought to be strong in the cities. The Baptists have no reason for hiding on the back streets. Let us come to the front, and preach the pure doctrine of the Bible. Such preaching, and such preaching only, is the antidote for any poisonous influences that may infect the people.

Thirdly, the factory operatives, and the laboring classes generally, are already Baptists, to a great extent, and those who are not Baptists are without fixed convictions. This fact makes the field one of interest and importance to every Baptist agency in the State. The principles have been instilled in the minds, and the foundation-stones have been laid by missionary preachers—God bless them! They have done well. Their influence is now living in the cities.

After a pastorate of eighteen months in Charlotte, one of the largest manufacturing centres in the State, I find that more than half of the factory people are Baptists, or such in principle. All the training that many of them have received has been along this line, and they are easily attracted to our churches and Sunday Schools; but of course we have to go out after them. This is well illustrated in the recent organization of two Baptist Missions in the city. The Presbyterians, in the same communities and in neat chapels, have been doing faithful work, but they have not reached the people. Now the Baptists in the same locality, without regular houses of worship, have Sunday Schools numbering almost one hundred at each Mission; and yet the work is only begun. Here, dear reader, is a great field that must be occupied, and that soon. The people are Baptists, and shall we let them drift away to other denominations, or into a condition of lukewarmness and apostasy? Nay, verily!

Charlotte, N. C.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.

BY REV. M. L. KESLER.

Various attempts have been made within the past few years to solve the problem of our Sunday School Work in this State. In the mean time, the work moves steadily on, improving along with all the rest of our work. The fact that there has been no solution may go far to prove that there is no serious and separate problem to solve. No one department of work in any church can, for any considerable time, be pushed far in advance of all the rest. As all the pipes leading from a reservoir will register the water at the same height—the level of the water in the reservoir—so all the departments of our church work will eventually find the same level. If artificial stimulus is applied to any department, it may boom for awhile; but in due time it will subside to the level of the reservoir of force behind all the work of the church.

The question of organizing a Sunday School Board, separate from the Board of Missions, has been raised, and may be raised again. Whatever else may be true, this is certainly true, that a majority of Baptists will look with disfavor on any movement that would tend to divorce the Sunday School work from the church. We must drive right midway between the rock and the whirlpool—too much machinery on one hand and an unorganized and unutilized mass on the other.

What are the needs?

I do not believe there is another Southern State in which State Missions has been so vigorously pushed as has been in North Carolina during the last few years. Where missionaries, sent out by the State Board, are occupying territory, I have yet to see the need of Sunday School missionaries to go in and organize work in the same field. It is easier for the missionary, already there, to organize a Sunday School than not to do so, if he organizes at all; in fact, it is about the first thing he can do on a mission field. On such territory the work is precisely the same—straight State Mission work. I think it is a fact, that in the States where separate Sunday School Boards have existed, they have practically done State Mission work, plain and simple.

But how about work for a missionary among the churches generally?

I should not thank a Sunday School missionary to come to my church to look after my Sunday School. I am pastor of the Sunday School as well as of the rest of the church, and if I am not capable of looking after the Sunday School, neither am I capable of looking after the rest. Certainly I would welcome help in my work, but I want it to be help in putting more life-force right into the heart of the church. No other man can do the pastor's work. If you would have work done in many churches that is not done, you must put pastors in them who will push that work. The churches do follow their pastors, as a rule. "Like priest, like people," is still true.

Struggle over the problem as you may, this much is certain: You cannot push the work in our churches beyond the pastors; if you do, it will not remain where you push it. This talk about a "layman's movement," that overlooks the absolute necessity of a pastor's movement, is amazingly cheap. There is little more need of a Sunday School missionary, as such, than there is for a prayer meeting missionary, unless he is practically doing State Mission work; if so, let it be called State Missions and pushed as such.

Some may hold, that since some men are specially effective in stirring up Sunday School interest, they ought to be sent out to do that work. Does not this argument lead to the position that each department of church work should be handed over to a specialist? This kind of work has its occasional value, 'tis true, but broadside buncombe Sunday School work is vastly overestimated. The mischief has been done for these years, in not considering it the duty of pastors to push vigorously their Sunday School work themselves.

The one crying need, in nearly all our Sunday Schools, is better teaching ability. That need will continue to cry till we have more general education in our churches. Many who are now teaching can never receive a liberal education, and they must stand at their posts till better teachers come on to take their places. Much can be done by teachers' meetings. This is one of the best agencies for improving the teaching.

Some kind of institutes can be of great help. The Chautauqua is a movement in this direction, only; instead of one, there ought to be a dozen in the State. I want to add my testimony to the excellent work done by the Chautauqua here at Red Springs.

I want to say two things more: One is, I believe the North Carolina Sunday School Chautauqua ought to be an object of report and discussion in the State Convention, just as the Orphanage and Wake Forest are. I cannot see how a Baptist in the State can be opposed to this, unless he is opposed to such work altogether. The other is, if it should be thought wise to organize a Sunday School Board, let its principal features be Colportage and Sunday School Institute work. There is great need of colportage work; it is the most neglected work I know.

Aside from the question of supplying literature, there would have been no Sunday School Board in the Southern Baptist Convention, and aside from this there seems to be very little need of such a Board in North Carolina. If I am not misinformed, the Sunday School Board in Virginia was organized primarily to do colportage work, but has, of late years, been doing mainly State Mission work.

These are just the views of one sovereign Baptist. Doubtless there are a thousands others who will differ from me and from each other. But I am willing to abide by what the majority of North Carolina Baptists say ought to be done.

THE ATTITUDE OF THE BAPTISTS OF NORTH CAROLINA TO THE SALOON.

BY REV. CHAS. A. G. THOMAS.

I am not acquainted with the sentiment of the brethren on this question throughout the whole State. But I am sure that the attitude of our great Baptist brotherhood is sound and scriptural. I do not believe the country contains a body of people more loyal to right than the Baptists of our State. They do not lean backwards on this important question; but wherever the question has been properly considered, they stand erect.

They may differ as to the many methods of the temperance leaders; but upon the evil, they stand solid against it. We have expected men to jump into full grown temperance men at one bound. We have not been patient enough to wait for the growth of convictions. We have dropped seed principles, but have acted like the little boy who pulled up the beans which he saw coming through the ground, thinking they had been planted bottom-upwards. We need patience to let the principles grow, and they will bear fruit if given room. We plant the seed principle and then try to force it to grow, and if it does not grow to suit us, we pull it up and plant again. This process has set back organized temperance work every few years, until the friends of temperance have become discouraged. The discouragement is providential, because it has inaugurated the educational temperance campaign, as is found in Guilford and some other counties, which will do much to develop the right principles, and naturally lead to some organized effort in the process of time. But some one says, "How long is this to continue—forever?" If God had despairingly asked that question when he begun to educate his people to the coming of the Messiah, He would have given the matter up as a bad job. But "line upon line," "precept upon precept," "here a little, and there a little," the educational process continued, until the world was prepared for His coming. He came—but was rejected! yet He did his work and gave it a start, which has accumulated much force and is moving on in majesty and power, conquering the world. So we must be patient in carrying on this educational work. Yes, patient! For a thousand years, in God's sight, is as but one day. Eternity is God's work day. We can afford to wait. The attitude of the Baptists is all right, on this question. They are not responsible for the blood which fanatics paint on the face of the sun. There has been the trouble with much of our temperance work. There has been a tremendous noise once in four years, and it has been summed up in the cry, "Vote as you pray," and "if you don't vote prohibition, you ain't got religion." The temperance battles thus fought are like the battle between China and Japan at Pain's Exhibition in the Atlanta Exposition. Tremendous explosions—terrific noises—great clouds of smoke—no harm done. It was a battle between friends representing two nationalities. The average temperance battle of the ballots is between friends who are dressed differently. They believe in different methods, but are struggling for the same end. They are not enemies, yet they shoot at each other and make the noise of the bitterest foes. Just here we have weakened our breastworks and made the temperance army and many noble Christians, whose quiet lives have been always against the saloon, to play the part of hypocrites, and have counted them with the saloon, because they did not believe in our methods. The Baptist brotherhood has been thus saddled with many a vile slander, and God will hold the men who have made the charge accountable before the Great White Throne. Every man who votes temperance and cries temperance, is not a temperance man, but a hypocrite sometimes is found. It is done by numbers for patronage and applause. There are hypocrites in the temperance cause, as well as in the church. 'Tis sad, but true of both. I have never voted as I prayed, because I have never prayed for the election of any party. I vote for what I believe to be the best method of conducting the affairs of government. I pray that God may overrule the affairs of government for the glory of His cause. The old cry, "Vote as you pray," is always interpreted to vote for prohibition. I have never done either, and never expect to so long as prohibition tacks on the "woman's suffrage clause." God teaches us to pray for rulers, not party success. I believe, with all my heart, in the "separation of Church and State." I believe in Civil and Religious Liberty. They are God-given rights, which make me a Baptist, and without which I could not be one. And hence, I believe every man has a right to say and act, with reference to governmental affairs, what he believes is right, without consulting church or State. The church has no right to interfere with a man's vote; it is a violation of constitutional rights, as well as God-given rights. I believe this is the teaching of the great Baptist host—and so long as this is God's privilege, given to every man, so long will the Baptists grant every man the right of choice of method on this great question. But because they grant this, it does not weaken their stand on the question at issue. They stand firm on both positions and cannot be moved. In the realm of thought, a man stands befor the bar of God. In the realm of action, he is accountable to God, his church, and the State. The first vote I ever cast in my church as a boy was to turn a liquor seller out. From that day to this, I have made a relentless war against liquor; but there has never been a day in all those years that I did not accord to my brethren the right to differ on the question. I have never been able to swallow the two wine theory. I have never been able to believe that Christ perpetrated a fraud on the people when he made wine. I have never been able to say that "if Christ came eating and drinking wine he was not divine"—and God helping me, I never will. I cannot go the lengths of some brethren on this question, because I believe it is beyond God's Word. I have been in the pastorate about fourteen years, and I have found the great host of Baptists with me in every fight made against the liquor business. I believe they will ever stand thus, and that the sentiment will continue to grow in power, until the curse will be crushed to earth, to rise no more. I hate the traffic in its deadly work; so does every child of God, and it is cruel and devlish to brand every man who does not agree with you as to method, a supporter of the saloon. I have circulated in every part of the State—I have found some people educated on this line more than others; I have found some who were very lax in their conduct along this line, but the great mass of Baptists are solid against the traffic.

The churches of the State are awakening as never before on this question. Discipline is being wisely exercised in many quarters; in some unwisely. The pulpit is hurling gospel arrows against this evil as never before. Our ministry is against it; they are crying aloud and sparing not; their work is telling for God in this matter; they will continue the good work—being faithful unto death.

I do not believe the ballot can solve this question in this generation. I believe the Gospel of Christ is the great solution—the Gospel of Christ expressed in the lives of his humble disciples. The war is on, the battle rages. Every brigade in Christ's army must fight—not each other, but the host of hell, gathered in our cities and towns behind the counters of the saloons. Let us look to God for help, and in His name we shall conquer.

THE MINISTERS' RELIEF BOARD.

BY REV. JOHN S. HARDAWAY.

The Ministers' Relief Board was brought into being by a resolution offered in the State Convention of 1889. Its subsequent history has demonstrated the fact that there was a work for it to do, and that the churches would respond when that work was laid before them. The first year the amount contributed to this Board was one hundred dollars, and this came largely from one church. Since then there have been raised yearly about six hundred dollars, and some ten or twelve beneficiaries have received help each year.

While the work has grown, and is growing, the interest in the work is not as wide spread as it should be. The cause of this slow progress is to be found among the pastors. Whatever the pastor takes hold of earnestly, the church will take hold of; and whatever the pastor leaves to take care of itself, the church will leave to the same fate. Why, then, has this work been so reluctantly pressed upon the churches by the pastors? Mainly, I think, because some have wrongly supposed that there was in this work some reflection upon the ministry. In one Association I know it was strongly attacked by influential ministers on this ground, and, perhaps, there has been some such opposition in many of our Associations. Then, too, our older ministers have some of them felt an embarrassment in appealing before the churches for this Board, lest they should be charged with being actuated by personal motives. However it may be accounted for, there has been a considerable indifference manifested toward this work. No such coldness should exist, for the churches can do no nobler act of piety nor one more acceptable before God, than to care for their superannuated, infirm, and disabled ministers and their families, when they need such help. No minister should hesitate to bring the claims of this Board before his people. The possibility that we, ourselves, might become the beneficiaries, ought not to deter us from securing help for the present need.

This Board is rightly named the Ministers' Relief Board, and, as its name implies, it was created to supply the wants of ministers and their families when they are in destitute circumstances. It by no means suggests that all ministers are objects of charity, nor would it be carrying out its mission to extend its aid to those that are not in want. Our observation teaches us that ministers, like other men, are often called to pass through hardships and poverty. Indeed, there are some peculiar causes that operate in the case of ministers that do not operate with other men, which almost inevitably lead to narrow circumstances. Churches usually place their preacher upon a bare living. The large salary is always accompanied by large living expenses. The preacher usually finds himself, at the end of the year, with nothing left over from his salary, whether he preaches to a large church or a small. Besides, the salaries of ministers are not always paid. I judge that no class of men are as carelessly treated in the matter of full and prompt payment of salary promised. Nor is any class of men so slow to demand their rights. Many ministers would rather give up their salaries than to be charged with the hireling spirit.

Again, the preacher cannot be a close business man for two reasons: In proportion as he becomes a shrewd business man, he loses in spirituality; and if he become a business man, with a clear eye for spending and investing money, he will soon clash with business men in their own field, and thus he will destroy his influence as a minister.

Besides the reasons already given, the preacher cannot lay by for old age, because he is expected to lead in all the liberalities of his church. Short, indeed, would all our contributions to our benevolent work fall if our ministers did not stir the hearts of their people by their liberality. I could give touching instances of ministerial liberality, but I need not adduce any proof of what is a well-known fact. The only way for a pastor to get money from his people is to give himself. If a church wants to dry up in liberality, it need only call a penurious preacher, and the work is done.

For these and other reasons, one can easily see that ministers cannot be expected to lay by for old age; and that there is a real necessity for the Ministers' Relief Board.

Often our hearts are impressed with the importance of a work by a sight of the distress to be relieved. So have I learned the need for this Board. I have seen ministers that had labored faithfully and usefully in their years of strength, come down in their old age to a pitiless and grinding poverty. I recall the sad face of one of these servants of God as he sat in my house and reluctantly told me of his abject poverty, and asked me to carry his name before my people as a petitioner for their charity. These practical appeals for this work make us know that such a work is necessary, and that it should be done in a business like way, faithfully and regularly. Otherwise many worthy ministers, laid aside by the infirmities of age, will be greatly straitened to live.

There are 122 Baptist newspapers in the United States. Fifty-five of them are weeklies, of which thirty-three are published in the South.

HOME MISSIONS.

Of all the various missions occupied under the auspices of the Southern Baptist Convention, those recognized under the name of "Home Missions," is, in some respects, of the greatest importance, and especially is this true as touching the uplifting of the moral and evangelizing influences which needs to be brought to bear on this lovely Southland of ours. I propose to consider in this article the subject in its relation to foreign immigration. For many years foreigners have been pouring into this country at the rate of half a million annually. This flood-tide has hitherto been attracted by the cheap, rich lands and unoccupied territory of the great West. Having been crowded in their native lands all their lives, they longed for homes where they could have room to stretch themselves once in their lives, and be at ease. Now, that the great West is becoming largely filled by native and foreign population, immigrants are turning their faces in large numbers, and with resistless force, to this sunny Southland, so noted for sweet-handed charity and unbounded generosity. These new-comers do not figure in our civil and religious liberty. They are coming from lands of tyranical serfdom, and from lands of priest-ridden slavery. It should not, therefore, be expected that they would, or even could, wield the influence for good as we would like them to wield, until their rough natures are brought in contact with an influence which will cause them to realize the difference between serfdom and freedom, and between dictatorialism and independence.

Liberty, social, political and religious, is a thing entirely foreign to the ideas of most of these raw recruits, and when they arrive on our shores and find themselves face to face with their new and much coveted condition, the natural tendency is to lead them to use the blessings of their advantages to the disadvantage of their benefactors. They naturally think, that as they have liberty once in their lives, they will use it for all its worth. Moreover, these immigrants bring religions with them—religions which render their possessors rather repulsive than attractive to us and our posterity; religions which have no Christ in them, and hence devoid of all the consolations which characterize the true religion of Jesus Christ; religions without moral qualities, which alone can make them good citizens. As they bring with them such conditions, and as these conditions have a contaminating influence on all our social and religious fabric, it becomes our duty as loyal citizens to teach them the true principles of law-abiding citizenship. They need to be taught that the ballot-box is not to be used for selfish ends, but for the general good, instead. Furthermore, it is our duty to implant in their hearts the positive principles of Christianity. They need to be taught that one great fundamental principle which runs through the entire Word of God: "the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man"—that all men are created equal, and one God is the father of us all.

There is no channel through which these principles can flow from our hearts into theirs more effectively, or more swiftly, than through the agency of our Home Mission Board. This Board, sustaining as it does, missions in all the Southern States is in a position to meet the immigrants in their newly adopted homes, and grapple with the erroneous isms they bring with them. Wherever a colony of Germans comes, imbued with principles of infidelity, there ought to be a missionary equipped with the Gospel of Christ to teach them salvation through a crucified Redeemer. Wherever comes a colony from any Romanist country, bringing with them their semi-idolatrous worship and their looseness of life, from a moral standpoint, they need to be taught to free themselves from the dictation of Pope and Priest, and stand squarely on the authority of Jesus Christ as found in the Gospel of the Son of God.

Pagans are coming to our shores in vast numbers, bringing with them all the isms that the world ever knew, and all depending on deities (so-called) or theories that are incapable of inspiring their adherents to lives of mortality, honor or integrity, much less of spirituality. They need to be taught to compare the power of their lifeless gods and theories with the power of the living God, the creator of Heaven and earth. Coming as do these people with theories so foreign to our own, and so detrimental in our free institutions, we are laid under renewed obligations for the rising generation, to bring to bear on them all the uplifting influences at our command, if haply we may be the instruments in the hands of God of making them heirs of eternal salvation through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The Atlanta Exposition, now in progress, will likely tend to heighten the aspirations of foreigners and quicken immigration in the South, and make it more necessary for us to guard against the dire calamities which threaten our future prosperity and happiness.

Again, many of these foreigners come to this country in search of a temporary home, for the purpose of making money to carry back to their native lands and enjoy through life. While they come for their temporal benefit only, it behooves us as servants of the Lord, living in a Christian land to enable this Board to throw around them the environments of Christianity, and thus bring them into the fold and favor of God. Then, when they shall have accomplished their temporal purpose, and return to their native lands with their accumulations, they may return with their hearts filled to overflowing with the love of God, and spread out among their fellow countrymen the glad tidings of Jesus and His love.

It is next to useless to send missionaries to China to evangelize the four hundred millions of population, while the few scattered Chinese in this country are left to see nothing of the Christian life in America during their sojourn among us. As a rule, the Pagans who come to America settle in the slums of the larger cities, where they see nothing of the best side of life. They see and mingle with the very outcast, and remembering that America is called a Christian land, they go away impressed with the fact, that if what they have seen here is Christianity, they do not want it in their own hearts, nor in their native land; and it is no wonder that they spurn the Christian missionary as unworthy of their acceptance in their associations.

The aim of the Home Board is to seek out those who come in our midst, whatever may be their condition in life, if destitute of the means of grace, and place in their hands a copy of the Word of God, throw around them influences that will draw them away from the slums, and ground them in the doctrines of grace as taught in the Gospel of the Son of God. When this aim shall have been accomplished, the returning foreigner will bear from America to his native land evidences of the spiritual superiority of Christianity over the religions under which they have been reared and trained. In order that this aim may be accomplished, the Board must be supplied with funds sufficient to enable it to enlarge the present operations, and place a God-sent missionary in every destitute city, town, village, hamlet and neighborhood in the land.

There is nothing under Heaven but the power of the Gospel that is able to combat these evils and drive them from our midst. God has given us the Gospel, and placed us under lasting obligations to favor those around us with its blessings, and we have no right to refuse to contribute to their moral and spiritual uplifting. Therefore, we ought to consider ourselves stewards of God, to use according to His directions every blessing He has committed to our care. The Home Board is the creature and the servant of the churches of the Southern Baptist Convention. Unless they are supplied with the means, their efforts to accomplish the aim in view will be futile indeed. Let each pastor in the Convention ask himself the question: What is my duty in reference to the Home Mission Board? and after thoroughly considering the matter, go before their churches with an earnest plea for the evangelization of the South through the agency of the Home Board.

BAPTIST MISSIONS IN TOWNS.

BY REV. S. F. CONRAD.

In my travels over the State I have been deeply impressed with the fact that we have been making a radical mistake in our mission work in the larger and growing towns. We have looked on and seen others occupy the ground and have contented ourselves with the fact that we have one or more churches, and leave them to cultivate the field, when they have had all they could do to support their pastors and not able to cultivate the territory lying near their door.

Bro. Dodeon, of sainted memory, used to tell of the wisdom of the Apostles in cultivating the towns which were centers of population and influence. It has not been long ago when we first began to plant missions in many of the towns in the State. Since they have begun to grow and increase so rapidly in population, we have not kept up with their growth and needs.

We now have a number of towns in which we ought to have a live, active city missionary. The Methodists have been wise in watching these points of growth, and there in not an important town in the State in which they have not been in the front rank in planting their missions. The towns are centres of wealth and influence. Many of them are now becoming large manufacturing centers. We ought at once to change our policy and push the town work. The district Associations are able to look after the country territory in most instances, while our State Board ought to begin at once a new policy as to town and city missions. In Charlotte, Salisbury, Greensboro, Winston, and many other towns, we ought to put one or more missionaries in the field at once. It is always hard to begin when the ground is occupied by others.

Stonewall Jackson's great success was in getting there first. We need to break the shackles of old fogyism and wake up on this point. If it is said by some of the country churches that we are expending too much on the towns, let it be remembered that the objection is ill-founded. The great bulk of our mission money comes from those churches in towns where we have been fortunate to begin in time. Town churches give ten dollars to one of the country churches, according to wealth and membership. The reason for this is because they are more highly developed in the work. Let our new Board at the coming Convention consider well these facts. Let us at once begin a vigorous campaign of missions in the larger and growing towns in the State.

A SORROWFUL YET JOYFUL FUNERAL.

A sermon preached in the church at Shelby, on Sunday morning the 24th, ult., on the death of Columbus Durham, D. D. Reported for the RECORDER by request.

"And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him."—Acts 8:2.

It is not strange that strong men wept and women wailed aloud. The brother beloved, of sweet and saintly life, the model deacon with his tender ministries, "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost;" the champion of the truth, "full of faith and power," who had confounded his enemies, argument with argument, reason with reason, silencing them out of their own Scriptures, had fallen suddenly in the fullness of his powers and in the moment of glorious triumph. Bewilderment and silence first; then sorrow, wave on wave. But every wave was gold crested with the promises of God and the light of the life to come.

Scripture repeats itself. The text was rewritten in Raleigh a week ago yesterday evening, when Columbus Durham, embalmed in love, and crowned with flowers which were watered with the tears of sorrowing affection, was borne to his grave by devout men who shared the general grief. No other citizen of Cleveland county has had such burial. Poor in a place where wealth counts for so much, without political significance in a city of politicians, without local interests or even an extensive acquaintance with the people around him, Judges of the Supreme Court, officers of the State government, prominent citizens, men and women from a distance were there in tribute to the grandeur of the man. Dr. Skinner, "such an one as Paul the aged," cried: "I shall miss him, how I shall miss him!" The youthful editor of the RECORDER said: "No one will feel the loss as I shall." Caddell said: "My loss is greatest of all." And President Taylor added, with eyes that glistened as he spoke: "Every Baptist in the State is bereaved, but none so sorely bereaved as I." Then the cry went up. Every one felt himself peculiarly afflicted, and had a grief peculiarly his own. Telegram and tear-stained letter from New York; telegram from the General Association of Virginia; tender, sorrowful message from the orphans at Thomasville; tears at the grave from the Confederate Veterans in the Soldier's Home. For weeks to come, there will be fresh outbursts of grief as the news penetrates into the remote neighborhoods of the State, and crosses the ocean to lands where our brethren are preaching the gospel among the heathens.

What is the explanation of these things? Partly, no doubt, it is to be found in what the man had done, what he was still doing, what he hoped to do. And I turn to notice

HIS CAREER.

In 1861, at seventeen years of age, he entered the Confederate army, a boy among men, and remained to the close of the struggle. Brave as the bravest, true and faithful as the most loyal, he was clean as a woman in life and thought; ignorant, to the day of his death, of the taste of whiskey or tobacco and untainted by the license of the camp. Like Havelock, he gathered his comrades for prayer-meeting at night in winter quarters and after marches or battle. Hon. W. H. Kitchen, who was in the regiment with him, once said to me: "Boy as he was, he was so good a soldier and so true a Christian, that he won my confidence and commanded my respect against my will." Capt. W. H. Day, of Weldon, remarked: "I was in the same regiment with him for twelve months. There was no braver soldier or truer man in the Southern armies." He was one of many whom Cleveland county gave to illustrate the courage and patriotism of her sons. But if she had given only this one she might rejoice forever.

In 1867, in his twenty fourth year he entered College, graduating in 1871. At an age when most men have finished their academic course and their preparatory training for professional life, he was just beginning. That he was able to maintain an honorable rank as scholar among such fellow-students as Presidents Brewer and Hobgood, Dr. W. O. McDowell, W. H. Pace and Drs. H. A. Brown, A. C. Dixon and R. T. Vann, is proof of extraordinary intellectual power and of unconquerable will.

1871–76 he was pastor in Goldsboro; five years of singularly successful labor. During these years he was much engaged in evangelistic work. One meeting, which he held in Scotland Neck, was so extraordinary in its immediate results and its far reaching influence as to be worthy of a place among the records of the apostolic churches.

1876–88 he was pastor in Durham; the most brilliant pastorate in the annals of the N. C. Baptists. 1888–95 he was missionary Secretary of our Convention. To write his history for this last period is to write the history of the denomination in the State. No other Baptist in N. C. has been able to touch the denominational life so effectively and at so many vital points.

I notice, next,

He had a strong and healthy constitution with abounding vital force; inherited from his parents and perfected by labor on the farm and by service in the army. Courage, both physical and moral, he also had in a high degree. His most striking intellectual feature was old-fashioned, Cleveland county common-sense, which in every situation sees the thing that needs to be done, and sees also how to do it, or have it done. With this he had rare gifts for the mastery of details and still rarer gifts for arranging the details into groups, and combining the groups, so as to make them most effective for the work in hand; instant decision which sometimes seemed the flash of intuition; confidence in the utterances of his own judgment; pluck and patience to carry those utterances into effect in spite of opposition and difficulty; hopefulness which never failed; a healthy, well-instructed conscience, which held him ever in its grip; a sense of humor which lightened the darkness, even of his closing hours; an ambition only to serve his brethren and a price of character which nothing could flurry or disturb.

Such was the man's personality as it appeared to me. Quickened in every part, sanctified, ennobled, controlled by the power of Divine Grace, a common-place career would have been impossible to him. It is not strange that such a man should have been loved by his brethren and respected by those who were not of the household of faith with him. He performed an astonishing amount of work, turning easily, from one sort of labor to another; failing in none, leaving none unfinished; a delightful companion; in his office a business man; in the field a general; in the pulpit a preacher far above the average; a clear and vigorous writer; among his flock a great pastor; on the platform one of the most effective speakers in the State; in popular assemblies a master. Well did Judge Clark, of the Supreme Court, say: "He is a loss not to you Baptists only, but to North Carolina."

I ask you to consider now

which created and shaped him.

They are found in the physical, intellectual and moral currents, which for generations have pervaded the region in which he was born and reared. Commencing with the vicinity of Charlotte and extending back to the foot of the Blue Ridge, is a region of surpassing fertility and beauty. Into this region have gathered more of the forces, which combined, tend to produce a race of noble men and women, than any other part of the earth, of which I have any knowledge. Hither came, first of all, the hardy pioneer, with knife and axe and rifle; to be joined later by the Scotch-Irish, colonized in a hostile land until they had become a distinct race; descendants of Huguenots who fled from the dragoons of Louis the XIV; of the men who defied Alva or fought under William the Silent and William of Orange; of the Covenanters who were harried by Claverhouse; by the Moravians with their sweet mysticism and their thrift; by decendants of men who followed Luther and Melancthon, at the risk, and sometimes at the sacrifice of all things; by patient, silent, long-suffering Quakers, and by Baptists who fled from the neighborhood of Alamance when Tryon laid at their door the troubles of the Regulation and sought to transfer to them the odium of his own barbarities.

Among these last, were the people that founded the church at Sandy Run, on the borders of Cleveland and Rutherford. In such a region and among such people, the victories of Cowpens, Ransom's Mill and King's Mountain, were according to the natural course of things. Of this stock, in this historic region, Columbus Durham was born and reared. His father was a man of great force of character, and earnest piety. His mother was a woman of singular intellectual and spiritual power. It was her prayer, from the first, that the boy might grow up to preach the gospel. Her prayers and her training have borne a glorious fruitage; and the end is not yet.

He was buried on a hillside, which slopes gently to the east, near the spot in which rest the ashes of his friend and co-laborer, Dr. C. T. Bailey, and not far from the place where several hundred of his comrades in arms lie in their last repose, awaiting the resurrection of the dead, and the general judgment.

WHY THE WORLD MUST HAVE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

JNO. C. KILGO, D. D.

The Christian college has a distinctive place to fill. It is the same distinctiveness that gives the church the right to exist, and the argument against one bears with equal force against the other. If there is no place for the Christian college, there is no place for the Christian church. But if Christ is to be put into our prayers, our songs, our worship, our merchandise, our domestic duties, and our social gatherings, why should he be driven out of our schools, and the education of our children? How much sincerity is there in a mother's prayers for her son and daughter, while she commits their education to a secular rather than a Christian school?

Really this is the master problem of education. It is not a problem of intellectual results, nor material equipments and expansion. It is deeper and vaster than these outward shows and pretensions. It is the same problem with which Christ struggled, and for which He expended every item of His moral forces, and for which He makes distinctive efforts and claims. To deny Him supreme claim at one point in life, is to deny it at every point. If He is not the Christ for you in the day school, he will not be in the Sabbath-school, and only skeptics would deny him universal supremacy.

It is the Christ-life the world must have and which the church must furnish to it. It is that life of truth, of self denial, of invulnerable courage, of broad charity, of universal sympathies, of faith in God and man, of all that went to make him superior and kingly, this is the life that the church must build up. And this is the idea and life that the college must give in its graduates back to the world. Splendid traders, graceful dancers, professional swearers, trickey politicians, sneering skeptics, scientific infidels, and dependent men add nothing to the living forces of an age and country. The true man is the Christ man; the true college is the Christ college; and the true education is Christian education.

The loud call for Christ-men with Christ-ideas that comes from every direction, is the most hopeful sign of our age. The rich and poor alike are calling for men of faith in Christ to tie the old world back to truth and righteousness. The great heart of the nations of the earth is yearning for his words and refuse to hear any other. Like the enthused apostle, the nations cling on to Christ because he has the words of eternal life. Shall the colleges send back to the crowd of dying humanity, men who stand dumb in the face of their wails? Have college men no words of life to sound in their ears? Have they hunted the flowers of the fields, broken the rocks of the hills, dissected the birds of the air, unboweled the fish of the sea, gone the rounds of the shining worlds, listened to the song of the poets of all ages, and from none of them learned one word of life? The colleges must send back to the world men with the words of Christ-life, and they must not bring them in doubtful theories to vex and mock human miseries, but they must be incarnated in big hearts, whose burning sympathies inspire new life forces. If the colleges cannot give out such men, then they may expect the contempt and hatred of the world. Colleges cannot be dancing while the great masses are toiling for bread and contending against ten thousand evils. College students dare not make a play ground of the throbbing bosom of the world.

It is not surprising that parents are seeking Christian colleges for their sons and daughters, and that Christian philanthropists are investing their money in Christian colleges as the hope of our civilization and the salvation of men. The educated skeptic is not needed, nor is he wanted, and those schools that give back Christian men and women have the confidence of the people.—N. C. Christian Advocate.

Rev. David J. Hill, LL. D. has tendered his resignation of the presidency of the University of Rochester, (N. Y.,) to which he was called to succeed the late Martin B. Anderson, seven years ago. It is said upon good authority that the resignation was brought on by the failure of Dr. Hill to get the co-operation of the trustees in making the University "broad"—i. e., less denominational.

INTERESTING FIGURES.

There are thirty-five young men on the Board of Education. It costs nine dollars per month for each man. If funds were forthcoming, there would be fifty deserving young men on the Board.

In 1793 there were 65,345 Baptists in the United States; in 1812 there were 172,073; in 1832 there were 384,926; in 1840 there 571,291; in 1851 there were 770,389; in 1860 were 1,016,134; in 1874 there were 1,633,930; in 1885 there were 2,507,753; in 1895 there are 3,687,421. Surely, our course has been upward and onward. If every country in the world were free as America, our growth throughout the world would be just as steady.

Missionary Baptist Church property in the United States is valued at $20,000,000; in North Carolina, $1,500,000.

In North Carolina in 1790 there were reported 94 Baptist churches; 77 ordained ministers, and 7,503 members. There are now 1,500 white churches, 900 ordained white preachers, and 160,000 white Baptists. Colored Baptists in North Carolina have 1,085 churches, 670 preachers, 33 Associations and 111,000 members. Church property valued at $216,844.

WHAT WE SHOULD BE THANKFUL FOR.

Common blessings of sun and air and sustenance are special to each one, or should be made so; and so too, home, Christ's love, His church, its fellowships and its opportunity for service, the means of grace and the hope of glory, this country of ours, the noblest arena for the Christian citizen. The shadow of disaster has hovered over our material interests and we have escaped. How many things we have not suffered! Our thanks may be shown in the cheerful spirit that reflects God's goodness on others, and by actual self-denial helps them with the money He has given us.

THOS. HUME.

OUR HOLIDAY ANNOUNCEMENT.

The American Baptist Publication Society desires to call the attention of its friends to its new and recent issues. Both in contents and in mechanical excellence, the Society's work is equal to that of any publishing house in the country. Our ideal is to give our patrons the best of everything. We feel assured that all who purchase and read our books and periodicals will endorse this statement.

The Temptation of Katharine Gray.

By Mary Lowe Dickinson. 12mo, 380 pp. $1.50.

Mrs. Dickinson, for several years the Professor of Belles Lettres in Colorado University, is now the editor of the Silver Cross, the organ of the International Order of King's Daughters and Sons, also Secretary of that Order, and President of the Women's Congress of America. She has written a number of other stories. "One Little Life" was read by Her Excellency the Countess of Aberdeen, who liked it so much that she took the entire Christmas edition of a magazine edited by herself, and putting everything else out of it, reprinted that book in full and sent it as a Christmas gift to all of her readers. Her style is finished but strong, She is a thinker of thoughts, and a student of character, and, unless we are greatly mistaken, "The Temptation of Katharine Gray" will be regarded as one of the great books of the day.

Mrs. Dickinson says of her book:

"I have tried to show the slow, subtle deterioration, and the inward wreck and failure that came to a life that ought to have been a grand success, and came through the lack of old-fashioned, honest principle, and adherence to conviction of right. I believe there is sound teaching along this line in the book. If it strengthens any soul that is tempted to do the thing that it likes best, instead of the thing that it is out and out right to do, I shall be well repaid."

HOLIDAY GEMS

NOT infrequently we see it stated in exchanges, as well as hear it from the lips of individuals, that this is a reading age. We do not intend to demur to this hopeful and healthy sentiment. We could wish it were true, to an extent even beyond the imaginations of the most sanguine. That more literature is circulated than ever before would hardly be questioned by anybody; but while this is true, it may not be amiss to question whether the number of individuals who read are causing this great out-flow of books, papers and periodicals, or whether, after all, it is owing to the fact that comparatively few families do the reading for a whole neighborhood, and that these few increase their stock of reading every year. An intelligent family may, for a while, be satisfied with the church paper, the county paper, and a political paper from the capital or other town in the State. But before long the horison of this family is enlarged, and the three papers which were once sufficient now afford but scanty supply of mental pabulum, and to supply this want the Youth's Companion for the boys, the Ladies' Home Journal for the mother and daughter, the Southern Cultivator, a magazine or two, a metropolitan newspaper, and several good books would be just as little reading as a well-to-do intelligent farmer and his grown-up boys could afford during the year. This accounts largely for the increase in the out-put of books, papers and magazines. Many intelligent people are not reading just because, unlike this class referred to, they have never been started.

Not long ago Dr. W. B. Royall, in an address to some young ministers, said, "The chemical action that makes a rusty nail is the same as that which produces a burning lamp. The rusty nail rusts on, attracts nobody, helps nobody. The burning lamp is a light to itself and to all who come within its influence." The bright boys and sprightly girls, who are little more than rusty nails when uncultivated, may be bright lights, the joy of their homes, the ornaments of society, if only the spark in their minds be kindled. To this end every one who loves his God and desires to see the greatest possibilities of his country developed, ought to strive.

EVERY man is entitled to his own opinion as to what the "Monroe Doctrine," to which there is such frequent reference, is or is not; but a writer in the Forum has made clear enough what President Monroe meant when he put forth the dictum which has borne his name from generation to generation. It had reference to the Holy Alliance, long since dissolved, the purpose of which was to prevent the growth or increase of republican governments. The reference was specific, though it was soon made a general doctrine; it condemned the Holy Alliance and advised a determined stand against acquisition by it of power or prestige in the Western hemisphere. Now-a-days there is no Holy Alliance; the genius of republican government has obtained recognition in the chief courts of Europe. There is no longer any movement against republican form of government or democratic institutions. The reasons for the enunciation of the Monroe Doctrine no longer exist. But the Monroe Doctrine has been popularly construed to be a declaration against acquisition of property or influence by any foreign nation upon American soil. And every time there is a boundary dispute between some small nation in Central or South America and England the newspapers call for "vigorous action along the lines of the Monroe Doctrine." Furthermore, it is urged that Cuba and Hawaii be annexed in accordance with the Monroe Doctrine. Doubtless President Monroe has been made responsible for considerably more than he calculated.

For our part, England or any other country has as much right to acquire power in South America as the United States. It is not a good plan to conduct one's self according to what some one else is doing. Let us take care of the United States. Certainly, if we can keep our cotton from being marketed at England's prices, keep our gold from England's manipulations and our heiresses from England's fops, well enough without going to war for Venezuela or some other country which has no claim upon us and which cannot be of interest to us.

"JINGOISM" is another expression which the newspaper reader has had to take into consideration in all sorts of connections of late. In old times the kings would bring on a foreign war in order to direct discontented subjects to other affairs than taxation. That was "jingoism" then, but they had no such name for it. To day the jingoist is one who is always urging war upon the slightest provocation, but with little idea of fighting. These over-patriotic fellows (who talk for their country but are slow paying taxes) who make spread-eagle speeches, are in favor of annexing everything in sight, and willing to wade through wars to do it, they are jingoists. We have no sympathy with such sentiments. We doubt the desirability of annexing Cuba, though it ought to belong to us if to any nation; and the the same is true of Hawaii. Neither of them is itself worth a war, however.

THERE used to be but one way of spelling, and that was "Webster's Blue Back." At the present time one can be utterly reckless in this matter, and if question of his orthography is raised, he will not have a great hunt to find "an authority" to sustain him. The question of who shall be authority cannot be decided. Webster and Worcester once had the field between them; but now there is also Stormonth, the Century and the Standard. What is true in this respect of spelling is true also of pronunciation. It is good for those who have poor memories, but hard against the beauty and strength of our language.

Out of these perplexities an Orthographic Union has arisen, by the efforts of well-known literary men, which proposes to reduce spelling to scientific methods. They recognize that such changes as they contemplate must be gone about patiently and cautiously. The people will be slow to sanction them, but the reformers hope that they will gradually become reconciled, and finally wonder why they tolerated Webster.

We print some of the rules as approved by the philological societies of England and America:—

1. Change ed to t when so pronounced, as in abasht, drest, hopt
2. Drop ue final when the preceding vowel is short or a diphthong, as catalog, colleag.
3. Drop e from words ending in ite when the i is short, as hypocrit
4. Drop final te in such words as cigaret.
5. Drop final me in words like program.
6. Drop final e from words ending in ile, when the i is short, as fragil.
7. Drop final e from words ending in ine, when the i is short, as doctrin.
8. Drop final e from words ending in ise, when the i is short, as promis.
9. Drop a from ea, having the short sound of e, as fether.
10. Drop final e from words ending in ve, when the preceding vowel is short or is otherwise indicated as long, as giv, leav, carv.
11. Change ph to f when so sounded, as fantom.

These rules cover the cases of some fifteen hundred words, to which are added some twenty others that defy classification, like tho, thru, gard, recsit, rime, frend, similar.

A leading paper, The Independent, announces that it will slowly adopt these rules, and begins by printing a list of words as it will spell them henceforth. Here are a few: altho, bedsted, catalog, colporter, develop, dialog, enrol.

Hereafter those of our readers who are doubtful of their spelling may rest assured that the editor will understand their more glaring errors to imply that they have adopted the new rules or have made some rules of their own.

WE learn from an article by Mr. Josephus Daniels in the Atlanta Journal that North Carolina mills have consumed 227,000 bales of cotton this year, an increase of 55,000 over last year. At this rate, it will not be long before we can save freights both ways on all our cotton goods. We have already learned to raise our own meat, corn and wheat, we cannot help raising our own fruit and truck, and if we can only dot the State with schools and keep them running with respectable equipment a reasonable time, North Carolina will be what the Creator intended it to be—the garden spot of this country. Already we have the resources for raising anything we want, and now we are coming to manufacturing.

From the same article we learn that we have also made progress educationally. The endowment of our higher institutions, the number of them, the number enrolled in them, the number of our high schools and academies and their patrons, and the appropriations for free schools and the number of children reached by them, have all increased to a gratifying extent.

Reflections on Notable Events of Recent Baptist History.

The purpose of these suggestions is not to criticise the men or institutions or movements that have figured prominently in recent Baptist history, nor to hold a brief as advocate for any side of any issue that is now before our people. The writer seeks to maintain the attitude of a calm and dispassionate student of our current history, and believes that many facts of that history are remarkably significant and will be very far-reaching in their influence upon the future developments of Baptist life and thought in America. It is probable that few will consider that the conclusions at which he has arrived are fairly deduced from the premises, and many will think that his view of current events is in some respects partial and in others exaggerated and not discriminating at all. It is difficult for men to foresee what historical consequences will flow from the deeds and events of their own generation; but that the future is so closely shrouded from our view does not at all absolve us from the duty of studying the tendencies and drifts of our own time, nor leave us free to act without regard to possible consequences.

One of the notable facts referred to in the title of this article is the friction that has been developed in connection with the work of the American Baptist Education Society. It is quite unnecessary to go into details with regard to it, as it is fresh in everybody's mind—is indeed a significant existing fact to-day. At its inception this movement seemed to be one of great boldness but of striking wisdom and full of blessing to our worthy struggling colleges, particularly in the South. It seemed to be the dawning of a great light upon our educational chaos. It would hardly be too much to say that with reference to our weak colleges in the South, some of us felt a new application of the words: "the people which sat in great darkness saw great light, and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up." It not only seemed the opening of a better day for these institutions in their battle against adversity, but it also gave promise of proving a practicable basis of co operation between the Baptists of the two historic sections of our country. But to the surprise of many, it has not turned so. Some of our colleges have received from it a decided benefit; but its failure to prove a basis of co operation between Northern and Southern Baptists has been as conspicuous as its helpfulness.

Another event, almost synchronous with that just mentioned, was the agitation upon the Sunday-school literature question. With the history of that famous controversy and its issue in the establishment of a Southern Board for the publication of Sunday-school literature, everybody is familiar, for the booming of cannon on that hard fought field has not yet died out of our ears. Now let it be borne in mind that this scribe is not "taking sides," but is maintaining the attitude of an impartial observer; and, whatever may be the right or the wrong of that dispute, this is evident, that the publication of Sunday-school literature has not proved to be a practicable basis of co operation between the Northern and Southern Baptists.

Following close upon these two significant events comes another agitation which has not yet reached its final stage, but the issue of which is in sight—the question of co-operation between the sections in young people's work. It is already apparent that the Young People's Union will not prove a practicable basis of co-operation. Again do I decline the tempting invitation which here is offered to enter into the merits of the question; but insist upon the fact, which to many is so acceptable and to others so distasteful.

Now how shall we account for the notable failure of these distinct, persistent efforts to secure co operation? "It is all sectional prejudice," say some; "a blowing into flame of the old embers of the war." It may be that this explains the attitude of some individuals. Here and there on both sides of the historic line are found men—survivals of a past historical period—who have not made peace. But this explanation is entirely insufficient to account for the facts we are considering. We must seek a deeper and more universally acting cause. For consider that these striking signs of divergence between the Baptists of the two sections have occurred within the period which has witnessed the most remarkable drawing together of these sections into a true national unity which has taken place within the last fifty years. Sectional prejudices have been melting away in the increasing warmth of the national sentiment. The old political demarcations are becoming less distinct as they fall into the shadow of the new issues that are rising. Once within this period of which I speak the attempt was made to accentuate the old issues and to force more prominently into the consciousness of the country the old sectional line; but the "Force Bill" failed. But in the midst of this growing amity between the sections, the divergences between the Baptists of the North and South have become more distinct and explicit.

May it not be, however, that the questions on which these divergences have taken place are superficial and unimportant? Again I answer emphatically, no. In each instance it has been a matter of grave importance. Look at them separately. Nothing is more intimately bound up with our denominational life than our denominational colleges. Whatever touches the denominational college affects one of the most powerful radiating centers of Baptist thought and life. In a different way the question of Sunday-school literature touches hardly less directly the formation and conservation of Baptist practice and thought. And in yet other ways the young people's movement bids fair to be no less potent in its effects upon denominational life.

The instincts of great bodies of men hardly ever miss the mark very far. And what is to me the most significant fact yet mentioned is that in each case the Baptists of the South have based their action upon the avowed purpose of conserving the distinct type of church usage and theological thought which has been developed in the South. Collateral motives have entered into their action. They deem it a matter of great practical expediency that the organization of the Southern Baptist Convention should be preserved in its integrity on account of the broad extent of our country which renders it difficult if not impracticable to bring all the Baptists of the nation into one missionary body. But lying deeper than this and acting more powerfully is the other motive. The preservation of the customs and theology of the Southern churches, this it is that has driven in the wedge which has made the breach between us gape so widely.

Another fact of transcendent importance is the different kinds of teaching that prevail in the representative theological institutions of the two sections. It is not too much to say that there is a distinct difference both as to the positive doctrines that are taught and as the general attitude of mind toward all philosophical and theological questions. In the matter of mental attitude the difference is more striking than in the matter of positive doctrine, but a careful observer can hardly fail to discern a clearly marked divergence in doctrine. The institution which represents theological thought in the South is the Seminary at Louisville. It is not so easy to say what institutions most adequately represent the thought of Northern Baptists. Indeed, there seem to be a greater diversity of thought there than there is in the South; which may be accounted for partly by the number of their theological institutions. But I should say that, whatever institution is most representative of the present state of theological opinion in the North, Rochester and Chicago mark best the direction in which thought in that section is moving. Now the Seminary at Louisville is the most conservative theological school in this country. Chicago is at the other extreme, while between them, and having more in common with Chicago than with Louisville, stands Rochester. And to go from Louisville even to Crozer or Newton you find yourself passing from one theological atmosphere into another. But it is needless to enlarge. This fact also is notorious, as are the others which I have mentioned. It is a common thing for Southern Baptists to suspect their Northern brethren of heresy, and it is a common thing in the North to regard Southern Baptists as ultra orthodox and reactionary. Of course, many individuals can be found on either side who have stronger theological sympathies with the other section than with their own. But these cases only prove the rule.

Now what is the conclusion to be drawn from these facts? Are we drifting toward a rupture of our Baptist unity in the United States? Is there a tendency toward a split into two distinct denominations? It seems so. Baptist unity is not organic, it is sympathetic. It consists not only in an identity of church polity but also in approximate agreement in doctrine and ecclesiastical usage, i. e., in the conception of inspiration, salvation, church ordinances and in general customs. Such are the bonds of unity for us. These broken, we are no longer one denomination. But, as we have seen, it is in matters of church usage and theological belief that the divergence between Northern and Southern Baptists has taken place. The bond of unity has been strained, there is no doubt about it. We have already drifted so far apart in many of those things which constitute our unity that co-operation in the movements and enterprises which vitally touch them seems to be impossible. The drift in our schools of theology is toward a widening of the breach. I cannot see at work any counteracting and unifying forces that are correspondingly strong. The unity is not yet broken; but is it not plain that unless some mighty unifying forces be at work or be set to work the divergence will increase until we shall be no longer one denomination? Give present forces and tendencies fifty years in which to work without powerful counteraction, and it seems to me that we shall be, to all intents and purposes, two denominations. But what forces can counteract these divergent tendencies? A fact which has in it some encouragement is the visiting of our great denominational gatherings North and South by leading brethren from the other section. But this cannot be very effectual in preserving unity. The three great agencies that preserve unity among Baptists are the denominational paper, the theological school and the anniversaries, or annual conventions. I do not see much indication that we shall be welded together through the agency of the Baptist papers. Too many of them throw their influence in the other direction. We have already referred to the theological schools. There does not seem to be any hope of bringing Baptists North and South into co operation and closer association in annual gatherings. The great moulding forces seem to be moving toward further separation. What the issue is to be no man can certainly foresee. It may be in the inscrutable providence of God inevitable that Baptists in the two sections of the United States shall drift further and further apart until they shall constitute two distinct ecclesiastical types. I cannot look upon the prospect with pleasure. But if God wills it, so let it be.—Rev. C. S. Gardner, in Baptist Courier.

BY RIGHT C. MOORE.

THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

1. Ephesus. This illustrious city of Asia Minor was situated south of the river Cayster, near the Icarian sea, and was the capital of the Roman province of Asia. Its location was specially favorable to commerce. Besides the coast roads leading to Smyrna on the north and Miletus on the south, there were two great inland highways, one leading northeast as far as Galatia and the other extending east to the valley of the Euphrates. It also possessed excellent maritime advantages, and thus became the chief emporium for western Asia. Ephesus was a principal seat of idolatry, a center and stronghold of paganism. It was "renowned for the worship of Diana and the practice of magic." The temple of Diana, standing at the head of the harbor, exhibiting magnificent architectural splendor, and adorned with the richest treasures from all nations, was one of the seven wonders of the world. "It is probable that there was no religious building in the world in which was concentrated a greater amount of admiration, enthusiasm, and superstition." Politically, Ephesus was one of the free cities of the Roman Empire, with its own magistrates under the general supervision of the Roman Proconsul. The people were luxurious and dissolute. A small Turkish village is now all that saves the vast ruins of ancient Ephesus from utter desolation. The magnificent city of Paul's day is no more.

2. Introduction of Christianity. A large number of Jews resided in Ephesus. Some of them were at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost and heard Peter's memorable sermon, and very probably on their return spread the first principles of the new faith. Here also were some disciples of John the Baptist, the only glimpse we get of them after the ascension of Christ. Paul made two visits to Ephesus. The first was only a brief stop on his way to Jerusalem. The second was more extended according to his own statement: "By the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears." He preached in private houses, in the school of Tyrannus, and in the synagogue with much success. Upon his departure, the infant church was entrusted to the care of Timothy under whose ministry it continued to flourish.

3. Destination. While Paul doubtless had the Ephesians in mind, it is generally believed that this Epistle was intended as a circular letter to the several churches in the province of Asia, of which Ephesus was the capital and chief city. In that event, the original letter would be without any special address, and all copies for local churches would have a blank space for the name of each particular church. Thus the words "at Ephesus" (1: 1), the only local reference in the entire letter, were inserted in an authentic copy of the Apostle's original and this copy was carried to Ephesus where it was preserved, and subsequently was incorporated in the Scripture canon.

4. Date. This Epistle was written by Paul during his first imprisonment at Rome, 61-63 A. D. It is impossible to ascertain the precise date; most probably, however, it was written in the year 63. It was sent with other letters at the hands of Tychicus.

5. Comparison with Colossians. The striking resemblance between Ephesians and Colossians is clearly presented in two tables by Conybeare and Howson. From the first which gives a comparative outline of their contents, we learn that "there is scarcely a single topic in the Ephesian Epistle which is not also to be found in the Epistle to the Colossians;" from the second which shows the verbal correspondence between parallel passages "it appears that out of 155 verses in Ephesians, 78 verses contain expressions identical with those in Colossians." With such facts before him, De Wette affirms that Ephesians is "scarcely more than a verbose amplification" of Colossians, and hence the genuineness of the former is questioned. That the coincidence of the Epistles is not due to the work of a copyist or forger is evident from the fact that the purpose of each is distinct; in the one it is incipient Gnosticism; in the other it is the "unity of the church catholic and its place in God's eternal purpose." The resemblance is easily accounted for when we remember that both letters were written by the same man probably within a few hours of each other. Hence the same great ideas and expressions are frequently found in both Epistles.

6. Features. (1) The usual signature by Paul himself is omitted. (2) "The theme of the Epistle is electing grace." (3) It contains no reference to any special church and is without messages of personal greeting. (4) Paul's doctrine of the church, the church in its unity, is set forth in this Epistle. For variety and depth of doctrine, exalted

The Biblical Recorder.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1895.

J. W. BAILEY, - - - - - EDITOR.
J. C. CADDELL, AGENT AND CORRESPONDENT.

THE NEW SECRETARY.

It will please the Baptists of North Carolina to know that the choosing of a successor to the late Dr. Durham was marked with solemnity and with repeated prayer to God. More than once the Convention bowed in humble petition for the guidance of the Father.

There were no candidates for the place. Brethren would mention this, that and the other one, but there was not a man who could be considered a candidate.

The manner of choosing was calculated to obtain the will of the churches. The representatives from each Association were asked to select one from their number to speak their will, Rev. Chas. E. Taylor, D. D., being named in the motion for chairman. Thirty-two Associations were represented. Prayer was repeatedly offered. Chairman Taylor said, after a conclusion had been reached, that in all his career he had never seen a body of men so impressed with the importance of their charge or more anxious for the direction of the Holy Spirit.

Under these circumstances Rev. John E. White of Edenton was chosen, and the committee nominated him unanimously. The election in the Convention was by acclamation. Every vote was for Bro. White, and every voice was hearty and full—such as to show sincerity, and to encourage the new Secretary.

Being invited to speak to the Convention, Bro. White well nigh overcome with the solemnity of the step that had been taken, informed the body that he accepted the trust not as an honor, but because there was no way to avoid it. Long since he had put on the armor of the Lord, and he could not refuse to respond to His call now. "The policy of this Convention is established; I am not set up to make a new policy, but to maintain that which my revered predecessor so nobly directed. It is now said of Bro. Durham that he was a leader—the leader; by God's help I hope to be a servant."

There followed a touching prayer by Dr. Thos. E. Skinner.

Rev. John E. White is the oldest son of Rev. J. M. White. He was born at Clayton in 1868, and will be twenty-seven years of age this month. His mother was a daughter of a pioneer Baptist preacher, Rev. John Ellington. Periods in his early life were spent in Raleigh, Holly Springs and Apex. His father is an educator as well as preacher, and his children are naturally well trained. John graduated at Wake Forest in 1890. At college he was a leader—not a politician, but one in whom his fellows had confidence and on whom they repeatedly placed honors. At the time of graduating he purposed entering the Law, but the impression made upon him in a revival that session started by the young ministers—(Rev. J. L. White led the meeting the last days)—was a lasting one; and at Mars Hill College, in which he was successfully associated with T. M. Hufham, Esq., he became convicted that he was called to preach. After two years at Mars Hill he was ordained (the late Dr. Durham being one of the presbytery), and accepted a call to Wilson. His first pastorate quickly brought out the promise that was in him. The Wilson brethren and sisters still love him, looking backward to his work among them as remarkable for so young a man. He has been at Elenton two years. His pasterate is well known to our readers. He has proved an able writer as well as speaker. His articles in the RECORDER have been clear and strong. There is no doubt of his positions. His loyalty to Christ and the Baptist principles, in missions, in education, and in every other respect, cannot be questioned; for he has repeatedly made himself felt for them.

God called our new Secretary. We asked God to call him. Our need was great, our perplexities many. Bro. White was raised up—unexpectedly to him and to his brethren. Now may God move the Baptists throughout our Convention to love him and to hold up his hands in the great work which he now enters upon for Christ's sake. When he is known as we know him, there will be no lack of supporters and co-laborers ready and anxious to work with him, not only for the Work's sake, which is the first consideration, but also for his own sake.

We were glad to have a visit from Dr. J. A. Speight, editor of the Atlantic Baptist, on his return from the Convention. "You had a good meeting at Greensboro; there was not a few, not a point of criticism," he says. This is getting to be the rule with the Convention.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE ORGANIZE AT GREENSBORO.

Wednesday night of last week found a large number of brethren and sisters (not all of them real young people) gathered in the Baptist church at Greensboro to hold the second annual young peoples' meeting, and to formulate further plans for young peoples' work. This gathering was for young people, if not of young people; and, while there was a goodly number of young people there, all were young in zeal and hope. The Greensboro people are good meeting going folk, and the church, which within is a model of beauty and taste, was well filled.

The opening of the meeting was prefaced with sweet music, Prof. J. H. Ruebush of Virginia, well-known to those who attend our Sunday school Chautauqua, leading.

Bro. Van Deventer formally opened the meeting with appropriate remarks. The audience sang "Carolina for Jesus," the rally song of the North Carolina Baptist young people.

Prof. J. Y. Joyner's address of welcome, which came at this point, was graceful and warm and earnest. This was followed by a "Welcome Song" for the occasion. Rev. M. L. Kesler responded appropriately, fully voicing the grateful sentiments of the delegates and visitors.

The program of the meeting was divided into three parts—Educational, Devotional and Missionary. Rev. Calvin S. Blackwell of Elizabeth City delivered a strong address on the "College in the Home." He made a rapid survey of the changes of the last fifty years, dwelling with emphasis upon the change of the highest thinkers from Skepticism to the Cross. Our State, too, is changing. One quarter of a million of our population is manufacturing. Only one boy or girl in a hundred can go to college, but we must educate more than that. And the speaker went on to show what our churches and young people in the churches can do in this direction. The Baptists have been in the vanguard of the world in emphasizing doctrine. A religion without doctrine is like a jelly fish—without backbone.

Rev. C. W. Blanchard then spoke on the Denominational Value of High Schools. Bro. Blanchard is doing much work with the purpose of establishing such schools in every direction in our State. He made a good, earnest speech, setting forth good reasons, and pleading for more activity toward this end.

On motion of Rev. John E. White, Bro. Van Deventer was chosen chairman for the rest of the meeting.

Thursday morning, Rev. John E. White was chosen Secretary; and a committee on enrollment was appointed.

On motion of Dr. Pritchard, all who were in sympathy with young people's work were enrolled.

The first address of the day was by Rev. John E White on "Making Baptists"—a loyal, powerful speech; and the RECORDER is glad to be able to promise to print it.

Then came the unique feature of the meeting, the reading by Rev. J. W. Millard of a bright paper by a young woman, Miss Carrie L. MacLean of Charlotte. The subject was "Woman and Education." The RECORDER will also publish this essay.

Time being at the meeting's disposal, on account of the absence of Rev. Chas. A. G. Thomas, who was booked for a chalk talk on "The City of God," Dr. C. C. Bitting, Rev. F. M. Jordan, and Dr. T. P. Bell, visitors, were welcomed; and they responded with fitting remarks.

The exercises for the morning came to an end with an admirable address by Dr. H A. Brown of Winston on "How to Conduct a Prayer-meeting; How to Enlist the Indifferent Members."

The closing session was devoted to missionary subjects: Rev. B. W. Spilman on "How God Led Us"; Dr. Thomas Hume on "Young People's Unions and Foreign Mission Work"; J. W. Bailey on "State Organization"; Dr. Pritchard on "Southern Organization," and Dr. J. S. Felix on "Southern Organization."

J. W. Bailey offered resolutions that it is the sense of the meeting that there ought to be a State organization of young people; that present officers, with approval of the State Convention, be considered permanent; that an Executive Committee and a Constitutional Committee be appointed; that the next meeting be held with the approval of the State Convention at the call of the Executive Committee; that the constitution approved by the Constitutional Committee be authoritative until the constitution is adopted.

The meeting was a success. Those who came to investigate were pleased, and criticism was disarmed. It was a meeting of representatives of the churches (more of them than not being past life's meridian) in behalf of the work of training young people. It was not an enthusiasm meeting. There was work and interest, zeal and good feeling; and when the meeting adjourned, those who attended it were better prepared for the Convention.

The following is the Executive Committee of the Union: Rev. R Van Deventer, Rev. John E. White, J. S. Felix, C. S. Caldwell, Thos. Hume.

The following is the Constitutional Committee: J. W. Bailey, Revs. R. T. Vann, J. Q. Adams, J. W. Millard, L. Johnson, T. J. Taylor, M L. Kesler. The constitution will be published in next RECORDER.

BAPTIST STATE CONVENTION.

THURSDAY NIGHT.

"The Voice of the Past Parent of Hope" was the appropriate subject upon which Rev. Dr. A. M. Simms of the Raleigh Baptist Tabernacle preached such an introductory sermon as the Convention has seldom heard. It was a comforting, encouraging sermon, filled with faith and breathing with trustful hope. We hope to publish it in full. At the close of the sermon Dr. Hufham offered a fervent prayer, and Dr. Thos. Hume pronounced the benediction.

Dr. R. H. Marsh was chosen president of the Convention without an objection. As the years come and go Bro. Marsh gets stronger and stronger in his place, and the brethren get more and more to feel that there can be no president like him. Our efficient secretaries, N. B. Broughton and N. B. Cobb, were re elected; also the other regular officers: J. D. Boushall, treasurer; W. N. Jones, auditor. Vice-presidents as follows: J. W. Carter, W. B. Oliver, W. B. Shaw. Trustees of the Convention: L. Johnson, C. M. Cooke, W. C. Tyree, T. H. Briggs, L. R. Mills.

The address of welcome by Pastor Johnson was just like him—cordial, full and free. And just here it is well to say that the Convention, though large, is well entertained, and has received every evidence of welcome into the homes and hearts of the city. The Convention has reason to be proud of Greensboro.

Bro. John A. Oates, editor of the North Carolina Baptist, gracefully responded to the welcome.

Bro. John C. Scarborough announced that the State Board of Missions and Sunday-schools had received enough money to pay off all obligations. Instead of working on a $15,000 basis, the late Secretary had decided that it would not be wise to try to raise more than $11,000 this year. The printed report of the Board was distributed.

There were many allusions to the death of Bro. Durham, and also to brethren Bailey and Carroll. Every one misses their familiar figures, and longs for the sound of their voices. It was decided not to elect the Corresponding Secretary to night.

FRIDAY MORNING.

Promptly at 10 o'clock the Convention was called to order by the president, and the proceedings of last night were read by Secretary Cobb.

President Marsh announced that a few minutes remained in which visitors and special representatives of various interests of the Southern Baptist Convention would be recognized and welcomed to seats in the Convention. The following were recognized and invited to participate in the exercises of the Convention: Dr. J. S. Felix, Asheville, N. C.; J. N. Booth, South Carolina; Dr. A. E. Dickinson, Religious Herald, Virginia; Dr. A. J. S. Thomas, Baptist Courier, South Carolina; Dr. C. C. Bitting of the American Baptist Publication Society; Dr. I. T. Tichenor, Secretary Home Mission Board; Dr. T. P. Bell, Secretary Sunday-school Board; Dr. Morehouse, of the Northern Home Mission Society; Dr. W. L. Wright, Richmond; Rev. F. M. Jordan, Western North Carolina Convention.

At this hour the report on Sunday schools for the Southern Baptists was called, and Dr. T. P. Bell invited to address the Convention. It is always a pleasure to the North Carolina Baptist Convention to hear Dr. Bell on this subject. On this occasion he made a strong and effective appeal for the continued support of this Board by the Baptists of North Carolina. "It is our literature; it belongs to us, and I believe in fostering what belongs to us. We ought to support this literature of the Southern Baptist Convention just as the Baptists of North Carolina ought to sustain Wake Forest College." The speaker said we ought to support this enterprise because in a financial point of view it is a success.

Fifty three thousand dollars has been disbursed through this Board since 1892. The profits of this business are distributed to States where they are not able to carry forward their Sunday-school work. For this purpose alone the Board has expended some sixteen thousand dollars.

At the close of this address, Dr. R. T. Vann of Scotland Neck moved to take from the table the motion providing for the appointment of a Secretary State Board of Missions and Sunday schools.

Dr. Simms of Raleigh proposed that the Convention devote a short while to prayer for divine guidance in this matter. Several earnest voluntary prayers were made.

At the close, Dr. Marsh stated the original amendment made by Dr. J. B. Richardson, which was, that a committee consisting of Dr. Chas. E. Taylor and a member from each Association represented, should constitute the committee to recommend a Secretary. This was accepted by the Convention and the committee organized.

The time for the special order, which was the report on State Missions, having arrived, the report was read by Rev. J. E. White, and discussed by Dr. J. W. Carter, J. D. Boushall and Rev. F. M. Jordan. There were many feeling references to Bro. Durham.

The report recommended no definite basis of operations, but looked forward to raising $15,000 the coming year.

EXTRACTS FROM REPORT OF STATE BOARD OF MISSIONS AND SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

Number of missionaries employed by State Board, 106; mission stations supplied, 335; out stations supplied, 1,246; baptisms, 1,768; added by letter, 1,263; new churches constituted, 56; Sunday-schools organized, 187. Houses of worship dedicated, 12; total cost, $7,000.

The report commends the Regions Beyond work, and suggests appointment of a committee to take the matter in hand.

It is recommended that North Carolina endorse the apportionment of $9,000 to be raised by us for Foreign Missions this year; and it is recommended that the amount be divided among the Associations.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

After religious exercises, Dr. I. T. Tichenor, Secretary of the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, spoke to the report on Home Missions. We love to look upon the face of this veteran of the Lord—so genial, kindly and sweet spirited. He made an affecting speech, paying noble tributes to Carroll and Durham.

The report recommended that we raise $6,000 this year. In all, $100,000 ought to be raised by the Southern churches. There is no work that can appeal more strongly to us than Home Missions.

The plans of co operation in work among the colored population, as endorsed by the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, and the colored North Carolina Baptist Convention, were adopted by our Convention. Secretary Morehouse, New York, Prest. Crosby (colored) of the State A. & M. College for Colored Race, Prest. Taylor, Prof. J. W. Gore, Dr. J. S. Felix, Dr. W. R. Gwaltney, Prest. Meserve, and Dr. N. B. Cobb made speeches on the subject. The vote was a unanimous rising one. Bro. Meserve's first appearance before the Convention was exceedingly favorable.

We have published an outline of the plans of co operation. The cost falling upon our Convention the first year will be $900. The aggregate cost will be $3,900.

Dr. Moorehouse says the action is like the conjunction of planets—an event of a life time.

Dr. Taylor: "I hail the day with joy. Durham was looking forward to it."

Prest. Crosby: "The Negro is bringing the North and the South to understand each other."

Prof. J. W. Gore: "I am glad I have lived to see this day."

FRIDAY NIGHT.

Rev. James Long led the opening exercises.

The subject of the hour was the Female University. Dr. J. W. Carter read a most encouraging report. A $38,000 contract has been let; $6,000 has been paid. The second story of the building is being raised. As the trustees are unwilling to risk going in debt, work will go on only as the people send in money. Dr. Carter made a fine speech, as he always seems to us to do. He said this work is the most important before us at the present time. He was followed by Rev. O. L. Stringfield, who made a characteristic, earnest and taking speech. Then came Bro. Edwards, who also spoke to the report. The appeal for subscriptions brought out obligations amounting to $1,225.

The report on Ministerial Relief was read by Secretary MacDuffie. This work is gradually gaining ground. The contributions from the churches show an increase. It is hoped that this object will be put before every church this year. The report asked that enough money (about $1,000) be raised to support twenty-five beneficiaries. The amount appropriated the past year $806. No debt.

Rev. J. S. Hardaway spoke to the report. He mingled common sense and pathos in his advocacy of the claims of the retired brethren, and made a strong impression upon the Convention.

Rev. W. C. Tyree expressed his pleasure that to night for the first time this object has been given a hearing before the full Convention. He plead for the Associational representatives to be more active. Explained the plains and working of the Board. One-third of the amount received yearly is put into a permanent fund; the two-thirds are distributed to beneficiaries. Already the permanent fund amounts to $1,100. Appealed to the pastors present to put the matter before the churches.

Dr. Pritchard enters a plea that every form for church and associational statistics have a column for a Ministerial contributions.

Bro. Reams of Durham made brief but effective remarks, as did also Rev. Calvin S. Blackwell. Rev. M. A. Adams stated that every church in the Piedmont Association had made pledges to this work. After a word from Bro. Burchard, the Convention adjourned.

SATURDAY MORNING.

Rev. A. C. Cree conducted religious exercises. This year it is noticeable that young men have been given this duty. It serves a good purpose, introducing them to the Convention and giving them a start in the work. The exercises have been marked with devotion and spirituality.

Prof. J. B. Carlyle read the following

REPORT ON WAKE FOREST COLLEGE.

"Since the last meeting of the Convention, four Trustees have died. These are C. T. Bailey, W. G. Upchurch, C. Durham, G. W. Blount. They all loved the College and served it well.

"At the annual meeting of the Board in June existing vacancies were filled by the election of N. B. Broughton, J. B. Boone, and W. C. Dowd.

"The number of students enrolled during the whole of the last session was 221. The registration for the present session up to date is 243. Of these sixty four are preparing to preach the gospel. There is reason to hope that others will enter the college within the next sixty days.

"At no time in the history of the College has the health of the faculty and student body been better than during the last twelve months.

"All the chairs in the institution are now filled and regular work is carried on in every department. At the annual meeting of the Trustees in June, J. H. Gorrell, Ph. D, was made full professor and placed in charge of the school of Modern Languages. N. Y. Gully, M. A. was made a full professor and placed in charge of the school of Law and Political Science. R. W. Haywood, M. A., was made assistant professor and work in the schools of Latin and Greek was assigned him.

"The success of the school of Law has been very marked and has even succeeded the expectations of its most sanguine friends. And there is good reason to believe that this is but the earnest of larger things in the near future.

The great majority of the students are working with assiduty and success, and are conducting themselves with perfect decorum. The number of those who are neglecting their opportunities and are disposed to be mischievous is small and will probably soon be smaller.

Many of the friends of the College have heartily endorsed the action of the faculty in prohibiting all games of foot ball except on the athletic grounds of the institution.

In the absence of a regular instructor in Bible studies, Prof. W. L Poteat has done a most valuable and faithful work in organizing and guiding a voluntary movement among the students in this direction. Prof. W. B. Royall is expecting to do some special and regular work during the spring term with the large number of young ministers.

A careful comparison, recently made, reveals the very gratifying fact that a larger proportion of students than for many years past are regular attendants on Sunday-school instruction. And it may be doubted whether there is in any college a more steady glow of missionary zeal than is found at Wake Forest.

The President of the college was at work in the field at large last session. This session he has been almost constant at the college. Since last July all the agency work has devolved upon Rev. C. W. Blanchard who has been seeking to complete the endowment of the Royall Chair. Hopeful progress has been made, but much remains to be accomplished. Than the completion of this special endowment no more important work is before the Baptists of North Carolina. If our people only knew the difficulties and financial embarrassments under which the Trustees and Faculty are seeking to do the great work committed to them and if they could realize the opportunities now before the college, they would speedily put at the disposal of the Trustees such means that the latter would be unhampered in the administration of this great trust."

W. R. GWALTNEY,
J. D. HUFHAM,
C. E. TAYLOR,
Committee.

This morning the Convention reached high water mark. Never in its history has a series of speeches been made on one subject which were so uniformly strong, impressive, clear and sensible. Love for the institution was alive in every heart in the house. Rev. W. L. Wright of Richmond began. One of the College's sons of whom she so justly is proud, he honored his mother worthily this morning. "What the fulcrum is in mechanics, education is in life; what the Gatling gun is as compared with the old flint-lock, in warfare, education is in the warfare of life." "Education is development for service." Beginning on this high plane, he pleaded for loyalty to the College, and pronounced eulogy upon eulogy upon it. Some of the reasons given for loving and cherishing and making sacrifices for the institution were: It is our College; if we have zeal for it, that sometimes makes us seem selfish, we cannot help it—we love her and will die for her; what Wake Forest does claim to do it does as perfectly as any institution on God's earth; we owe it to the professors there (the man at the head of the College, an hundred fold my superior, is working for $700 less than I); we owe it to ourselves, our principles and our God; above all, it saves the souls of men. A well endowed institution is nearest to immortality of all things of the earth, and it is one of the greatest instruments for salvation.

Rev. J. W. Millard of Henderson followed. Some of the brethren said it was the speech of his life, but he is too young for that. Indeed, it was a magnificent effort. Only a few years out of Wake Forest, just from the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, he is a fine example of the educated man in the ministry—young, but looked up to and given weight in our deliberations. We cannot attempt to even summarize the speeches of any of the speakers by reason of the limitations of time and space. Wake Forest's chief glory is religious training with intellectual culture. No matter where you take up your lines, they all lead to Wake Forest among Baptists in North Carolina. "Every brick in the buildings is a saint's sepulchre." She is recognized abroad; you know what Harper of Chicago thinks, you know what the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary thinks. Her sons have brought this honor upon her. A mother's glory is her children, a farmer's, his crop; a minister's, his converts; a college's, her sons. Remembering our mother's many gifts to us, let us make returns. She needs more endowment, she needs a biological laboratory, she needs larger facilities, she needs a Summer School."

Rev. R. T. Vann was called out by President Marsh. The Convention is always glad to hear Bro. Vann; but more especially this time because the old-time twinkle beamed from his eyes, the gentle humor flowed from his lips, and the voice so sweet had lost none of its cadences. He is the prose poet of the Convention.

Prof. J. B. Carlyle followed. Every man who had preceded him was an orator. Bro. Carlyle's reputation as a speaker and as a lover of the College prepared the audience for a magnificent effort. There was no disappointment. The brethren who were taking notes forgot their pencils. The speaker said: The strength of our College is not in endowment, not in her faculty, not in her buildings, but in her sons, and, most of all, in the thousands of loyal Baptists throughout the State who never saw the institution, but who love it for what it has done and will do. Behind us are the sufferings and sacrifices of our fathers; we have the blessed heritage of the beginnings made by them and their prayers to God; we have the glory and the duty before us of achievement.

The report was adopted.

Bro. Blanchard was retained by the Trustees in their meeting with a motion that showed their appreciation of his work. He has done a fine work this year, and has proved himself in every way qualified for the position.

The special order at this hour was Ministerial Education. Secretary Mitchell read report and spoke on it. Thirty six young men have been sustained this year at a cost of nine dollars a month for each man. There is question in some minds of the advisability of the present system of requiring the beneficiaries to pay back the amount received after five years. Bro. Mitchell was desirous of having the question settled, but there was no definite expression. For our part, we think the plan a wise and sensible one. A man who will refuse to incur a debt of $360 to get four years' training for the ministry at Wake Forest College—well, he is not the kind of man we admire. We have in mind a young pastor in this State who, though left resourceless at an early age, having a family to support, not only went to college four years, but was debater from his society, editor of the Student, took the highest degree, squared up his father's estate, and entered life $2 000 in debt; but in two years reduced it half, and is already planning to go to the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary. This is the kind of man that moves heaven and earth for God.

To return, the Board of Education is $800 in debt. It has expended this year $3 570 56. There is greater demand than ever for educated young ministers. We have refused many applications. Bro. Mitchell pointed to those who had been speaking in the preceding hour, as young men who would hardly have been here but for this Board. It was a good, earnest speech.

Rev. M. A. Adams, another testimony to the college and the Board of Education, read the report on the Orphanage and made a good speech. It was recommended that every church take collections for this object and that the Sunday schools take collections every month. Charity and Children under Bro. Johnson was commended. Bro. Boone, manager of the institution followed with a plain, matter of fact speech, not without a deep touch of pathos at the end. The Orphanage has passed the crisis. A debt of $600 reported in August has been reduced to $300. Contributions continue to come in. They come not from rich people, not from the rich churches, but from the poor. The Orphanage is the poor man's or woman's object of love and sympathy. "I have been made to think," said Bro. Boone, "better of the people of North Carolina. There are so many good people of whom I had never known." Increase of capacity is needed. A great step in this direction would be the establishment of a central building for school purposes. It will give more room in the living houses and will foster the spirit of community. This building will cost $3000. We hope by time we meet at Morganton plans for the building will be definite. $180,000 has been given by our churches and individuals for the Orphanage in nine years. There are seven Orphanages in this State. After a collection had been taken. President McIver was recognized, and he said a few words relative to our Female University, expressing his interest and good wishes. Prest. McIver and Prof. Joyner have been exceedingly kind with their repeated invitations to the convention to go over to the State Normal and Industrial School, and a great many have accepted their invitations.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

The report of the committee to nominate a successor to the late Dr. Durham was called for Chairman Chas. E. Taylor arose and briefly with a well-chosen introductory stated that the committee unanimously nominated Rev. John E. White. On motion he was elected by the convention corresponding secretary of the State Board of Missions by acclamation.

Bro. F. P. Tucker, president of the Western North Carolina Baptist Convention was recognized and asked to speak to the convention. He expressed the love and the good wishes of our western brethren. He thanked God that we have but one Orphanage and one Wake Forest.

The next order was the report on Sunday day-schools and colportage. Bro. Cary J. Hunter offered report, which pending, Dr. C. C. Bitting made an excellent address. He says the American Baptist Publication Society has the best Baptist periodicals of any institution on earth, and he wants the people to use them. He thinks there is no necessity for others. His speech was well received.

The report on Sunday schools and colportage as offered by Bro Hunter was not understood. There was another report, Rev. Dr. A. M. Simms chairman of committee, on constitutional change; and another (minority report by Bro. J. C. Scarborough.) On motion all these reports were recommitted. At night Bro. Hunter read report recommending that our Sunday-school and colportage work be placed in the hands of a special committee of fifteen members of the State Board, which committee may employ a secretary, and must report to the convention. This puts the Sunday-school work on a good basis, giving it the advantage of being the especial care of selected brethren, and yet keeps it in close touch with the State Board. This is the solution of a problem that seemed dangerous at one time. The report further commended the organization of the Sunday school workers of our convention, the holding of institutes, etc.

The committee, having the matter in hand, reported that the late Dr. Durham had sacrificed a paid up insurance policy for $540 (cash surrender value at time $170) and had gone to other expense in the publication of the pamphlet, "How Far Should a State Undertake to Educate?" A collection was taken amounting to $600 or more, reimbursing the family. There was a tender, earnest prayer by Bro. Skinner. Every now and then during the session, there is a feeling allusion to Bro. Durham, and the expressions of sympathy for him and his family have been warm and general.

It was voted to change the time of holding the Convention to 2.30 p. m. Wednesday after the second Sunday in November. This is a constitutional change, and required two-thirds vote, which was easily obtained. The place selected is Morganton. There was interesting and determined contention by representatives of Greenville and Wilmington, brethren Billings and Lamberth for the former, and brethren Oliver and Hall for the latter. Bro. Patton's claims, however, being backed by the committee and a good speech from himself, received the heartiest vote.

Dr. J. B. Richardson was selected to preach the sermon, Rev. J. H. Lamberth, alternate.

SATURDAY NIGHT.

Rev. E. Y. Mullins, Associate Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board, made a fine impression. His appeals were calculated to reach coldest hearts. His depreciation of the tendency to criticise missions and to hesitate in their support was well sustained by arguments and references to Scripture. Bro. Mullins and Bro. Van Deventer got together the Associational Foreign Mission representatives during the week and gave them a better idea of the work to be done. We will undertake to raise $9,000 this year.

Bro. Britton, who made his farewell on the eve of his departure for China at Greensboro seven years ago, was called out. He made a good speech.

Bro. Chappell was called for, but considering the lateness of the hour and the work yet to be done, expressed his pleasure at being in the Convention, but made no speech.

The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary men had met with Bro. Dargan this afternoon, and organized an Alumni Association. There are between forty and fifty Seminary men in our State. Rev. W. C. Tyree was chosen president, J. K. Fant, vice-president, and J. W. Mullins, secretary. Doctor Dargan's speech, following the discussion on Foreign Missions, was one of the taking features of the Convention. We like him. His ways of saying things, his ready wit, his eloquence, and his memory of names and faces, make him a great collection taker. He had no trouble in getting just what he asked for—$500—and a little more. We have sixteen men at the Seminary, and they are doing well. The number will be greatly increased in the next few years. As Agent of the Aid Fund, the young men have an efficient provider in Bro. Dargan.

Sunday the brethren scattered throughout the city and locality, preaching and hearing preaching. A Sunday school mass meeting was held at the Baptist church early Sunday morning. There were speeches by brethren Broughton, Horne, Spilman and Mullins.

The Baptist Historical Society held its eighth annual session in the Baptist church on Sunday at 3 o'clock.

After the reception of new members, and some appropriate and touching allusions by Dr. Thomas Hume, the president, on the death of Drs. Durham and Carroll, who were members of the Society, Prof. J. B. Brewer read an interesting and instructive paper on the life and labors of Dr. Samuel Wait. This paper contained many valuable parts concerning the early history of the Baptists of North Carolina in their efforts and struggles to start the enterprises which have caused to no small extent the growth and influence of the denomination.

At the conclusion of the reading it was ordered by the Society that the paper be printed and become a part of the permanent history of the Baptists in North Carolina. And as an evidence of the merits of the paper President Brewer was made a life member of the Society.

Dr. J. D. Hufham was then asked to address the Society on the Anti mission Baptists of North Carolina, and for more than an hour this walking encyclopedia of Baptist history brought forth things "new and old" from his rich and apparently exhaustless fund of as yet unwritten history.

We are glad that two young ladies from the Normal School laid violent hands—shorthand—upon his winged words, and that this much of Dr. Hufham's historical fund will become the property of the Society which he has done so much to aid, but for which he has never written.

Speakers and readers of papers who were not present this year, were instructed to continue these subjects till our next meeting in Morganton in 1896.

The Society appointed Dr. W. B. Royall of Wake Forest to prepare a paper on the life and labors of Rev. Elias Dodson, and Bro. T. M. Pittman to prepare a paper on the life and labors of Rev. Josiah Crudup.

A standing committee, consisting of Dr. J. D. Hufham, Dr. N. B. Cobb and Bro. T. M. Pittman, was instructed to have printed such papers as may be of interest to our denominational history.

The following officers were re elected: President—Thos. Hume; Vice-Presidents—Chas. E Taylor, W. B. Oliver and J. W. Carter; Secretary—J. C. Caddell; Treasurer—W. L. Poteat; Corresponding Secretary—N. B. Cobb.

Bro. N. B. Broughton addressed the Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon, and Dr. Pritchard delivered a discourse at the State Normal and Industrial School.

The day is quiet and restful; and it is welcomed as a rest day. The week has been crowded with history. Then tension is off. We are thanking the Lord for having brought us through the crises with good feeling, hope and desire to do greater things.

Sunday night eulogies upon the distinguished dead, were delivered by Drs. J. D. Hufham, T. E. Skinner, H. A. Brown, R. T. Vann, T. H. Pritchard, Revs. G. M. Webb, R. N. Hawkins, L Johnson, J. H. Vernon, J. G. Pulliam, and Bro. J. C. Scarborough.

MONDAY MORNING

The first order was the report of the committee appointed to take charge of the BIBLICAL RECORDER at the death of the late editor. Rev. H. A. Brown read the report. The present editor and the existing arrangement were approved. There were several speeches.

The report on Periodicals was read by Rev. J. H. Lamberth. The RECORDER as organ of the Convention was heartily endorsed. The North Carolina Baptist and Charity and Children and other papers were favorably mentioned.

Dr. N. B. Cobb was elected Statistical Secretary.

The report on Young People's Work was brought up. The constitution adopted by the committee appointed by the chairman of the recent Y. P. meeting, was read; and the report was adopted. Dr. Hufham introduced a resolution recognizing the organization, and suggesting the wisdom of having a committee appointed by the Convention to look after the organization, with a view to keeping it in vital touch with the Convention.

The report of the committee to memorialize the Legislature against State aid to Higher Education was read and adopted. The memorial was ordered printed in the minutes, for permanent record. The Convention will not give up its position in this respect.

Very affecting was the parting scene. Resolutions thanking profusely the good people of Greensboro for their kind hospitality were adopted. Pastor Johnson, Dr. Rowe and Bro. Eller deserve especial thanks.

We will publish some of the reports next week.

Many said it was the best Convention in years. Certainly it was remarkable for sweetness of spirit, harmony, intelligent discussions and business like procedure.

NEWS NOTES.

....Rev. F. T. Wooten accepts a call to the Plymouth church.

....Dr. Pritchard is preaching a series of sermons on the compound names of God in the Old Testament. The first subject was Jehovah Nissi, the "Lord our Banner."

....The following churches were once aided by the Home Mission Board: Asheville, Henderson, Newbern, Charlotte, Concord, Chapel Hill, Raleigh, Edenton, Goldsboro, Warrenton, Elizabeth City, Washington, Tarboro, Newton, Olivet at Charlotte.

....The Christian Index says that "Rev. G. W. Gardner has accepted the call to the church at Fort Valley and will soon move his family from Jackson. Dr. Gardner is a sound preacher, a good pastor, and an earnest worker. Fort Valley is to be congratulated."

....Bro. Robert Sherrer, one of the most prominent and substantial laymen in the Three Forks Association, died at his home near Boone last week of heart disease. Bro. J. G. Pulliam, who married a daughter of Bro. Sherrer, passed through Raleigh on his way to the funeral. We extend sympathy to the family and friends.

....Bro. Joe A. Spruill of Columbia, N. C., writes, Dec. 3d, 1895: "The call extended to Rev. Josiah Elliot by Columbia church two months ago has been accepted, and his work will begin January 1st, 1896. The church is rejoicing. To the Lord be all the praise."

....Rev. W. R. Gwaltney calls attention to the union meeting of the Central Association, and requests the churches to appoint delegates to it as soon as possible. It meets at Paris Chapel church, ten o'clock Saturday before fifth Sunday. Program will be announced.

....Rev. J. A. Campbell is working to have the new building of his school completed by spring. He is also trying to accumulate a library for students, and will appreciate contributions. We are sorry Bro. Campbell could not be with us at Greensboro.

....Rev. Joseph Potts filled the pulpit of the Raleigh First church on Sunday morning last. Rev. A. C. Cree occupied the Tabernacle pulpit both morning and evening. Large congregations greeted both preachers. Pastors Carter and Simms were at the Convention.

....Wake Union Baptist church has called Bro. M. R. Pernell to serve them the ensuing year. This church has for a long time had one of the most efficient pastors of our State, Prof. W. B. Royall, who sometime ago resigned the pastorate to more fully devote his time to college duties. It is gratifying to know that they have secured another pastor so devoted to his Master's work and so fully resigned to his will, for the future.

....Bro. T. Neil Johnson reports a recent missionary meeting at Wake Forest as follows: "The subject was, 'What have been and are likely to be the effects of the China-Japanese war upon missions,' discussed by C. R. Hairfield and Prof. J. B. Carlyle. Prof. Poteat is to deliver his lecture, 'The Physiological Basis of Morals,' before the Scientific Society next Tuesday night. Hope to have Pres. Harper of Chicago give us an address soon."

....The Wake Forest Student for November is a good number. Judge Walter Clark, Prof. E. W. Sikes and Prof. R. W. Haywood contribute to its pages, and there are a number of other contributions from students creditable to the College. We were especially interested in "The Sphere of Journalism," by Mr. R. N. Simms, son of the Raleigh Tabernacle pastor. The article is set on a high key, but for all that is a pretty good statement of what an editor ought to be.

....It was the reporter's privilege to attend the Baptist church in the morning. It was communion day; that large and comfortable church was filled with an eager and expectant audience. Rev. Dr. Blackwell, faultlessly dressed, his handsome face lighted with animation, and graceful; his subject well in hand, in his happiest vein delivered one of his best sermons. His delivery was more quiet, and his style more subdued than at times, but with a charming manner and elegance of delivery, he carried with him his hearers, while he enforced by poetical and beautiful illustrations (one of which was indeed homely, but none the less apposite) the lessons embraced in his sermon. His text was, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his goodness and mercies to us? I will take the cup of salvation and call on the name of the Lord." The sermon was practical in the extreme; it taught gratitude for the present blessings of life; it was full of the gifts of God; it taught the duty of drinking deep of the cup of salvation; and that it was the most acceptable thing one could do in return to God for all his benefits. A touching reference was made to the late Dr. Durham.—Elizabeth City Economist.

Seminary Notes.

Dear Recorder:—I beg leave to give your readers a few dots from the Seminary:

To day is the Nation's "Thanksgiving Day", and of course we have holiday. It is a typical autumn day. The sun is shining with unwonted brightness and all nature seems to be in unison with the voice of praise and thanksgiving that is going up from many a heart in our Nation to our Creator and Preserver.

Several of the students are out of the city; some holding services in their churches, some attending weddings, and some have gone to help devour turkey and other good things at the home of friends at a distance. But by far the majority are in the city taking "Thanksgiving" with friends in the city, or partaking of the feast spread before them at New York Hotel.

The Baptists of the city had their usual union service this morning. This year East Baptist church, Dr. J. T. Christian, pastor, was the place, and Dr. W. L. Pickard, pastor of the Broadway church, was the preacher of the occasion. A very appropriate, well conceived and well delivered sermon did he preach from 1 Thess. 5: 18.

Dr. E. C. Dargan preached at the Highland Baptist church in the extreme eastern portion of the city.

The Christian people of Louisville have abundant reason for thanksgiving and praise. Besides the blessings that all people have enjoyed, showers of blessings have descended upon her from the throne of grace. The city has been stirred religiously as perhaps never before as a result of the Mills meetings that closed last week, and the special services that have been held and are being held in the various churches of the city. Rev. S. M. Brown, not unknown in North Carolina, is preaching at the Twenty-second and Walnut Street Baptist church. He can reach men's hearts in song as well as in the proclamation of the truth from the pulpit.

All of the professors are here now except Dr. Whitsitt, who has been in attendance upon the South Carolina State Convention.

The students generally are in excellent health. A few new ones have come in quite recently. One of them was from North Carolina—Bro. Wright of Richmond county. This swells our number to seventeen, perhaps the largest attendance our State has ever had here at one time.

We mourn with the Baptist brotherhood of North Carolina the unexpected death of Dr. Durham. Truly a hero has fallen in the thickest of the battle, but God knows best. May his mantle fall on another who shall carry the work bravely on. May his zeal be caught up by the Baptist hosts of North Carolina and the cause for which he laid down his life be entrenched in their hearts as never before. May he, whose voice is now silent on earth, speak in the hallowed memories that cluster around his useful life in louder tones to them than while he moved among them.

Dec. 1st comes on Sunday. So Monday will be Missionary Day. But more about this later. Very truly,

R. G. KENDRICK, JR.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 28, 1895.

An interesting program was carried out at the December meeting of the Seminary Missionary Society which met in Norton Hall, Dec. 2.

Prof. Dargan's opening address was a very spirited appeal to pastors "to feed the sheep."

Reports from quite a number of the men now in the field, were received by the Society, among which were communications from some of our North Carolina missionaries; G. W. Greene, D. W. Herring and T. L. Blalock.

Bro. Truex, of Arkansas, read before the society, a very able paper on "Woman Work."

Prof. Harris spoke briefly of the situation in Turkey.

Upon the resignation of Prof. Dargan as president of the society, Prof. Harris has been chosen to succeed him, and will enter upon the duties of of the office at the next meeting in January '96.

Prof. Harris has kindly offered to give his class in Biblical Instruction an extra series of illustrated lectures.

Intermediate examination will commence Jan. 6, and will continue until Feb. 4. However, the regular work will be carried on without a halt.

There are seventeen North Carolina boys now at the Seminary—one addition within the last month, Bro. Wright, of Richmond county all join in best wishes to the RECORDER. Sincerely,

J. D. MOORE.

A Meeting and a Prayer.

I have just closed a meeting with Macedonia church, two miles south of Taylorsville, in which from the beginning the presence of the Spirit in great power was manifest. Brethren C. C. Pool and Lee Davis were with us part of the time and did effective work. As a result we received twenty for baptism and one by letter. The church is thoroughly revived and ready for the Master's work. To the Lord be all the praise.

Taylorsville church is praying for an outpouring of the Spirit, looking forward to the coming of Bro. Church after Christmas holidays. This church is enjoying a steady growth. The Wednesday night prayer-meeting is well attended, the Sunday-school is in a flourishing condition, which, together with services twice a month, and an increase of a hundred per cent in membership in the last two years, made the brethren very hopeful by God's blessings of the future.

Pamphlets Sent Out.

I am sending out a number of little pamphlets about the opening of the Spring Term of the College on January 15th, 1896. They go to pastors and others for distribution, and, in many cases, directly to young men. The names of the latter have been sent to me by many parties. It may be that some who receive the little brochure are now in academies and high schools, preparing to come to college hereafter.

I have no disposition whatever to hurry a young man to college from a good preparatory school. Those, therefore, who receive my pamphlet and are already in academies will please accept what I have written, not to influence their immediate action, but for their future guidance. We have not knowingly sent these circulars to young men now in preparatory schools.

Pastors and other friends of the College who may receive more than one copy will do us a favor by their judicious distribution.

The Baptist Superintendent enters upon its thirteenth year with 1896. It has made an honorable record, and proved itself to be essential to every superintendent who would keep abreast with the times. Special attention is to be paid to blackboard [illegible] and outlines during the year. metaphor, and animated fervor of style, it stands unrivalled.—Paley. (6) In this Epistle, the divinest composition of man, we have contained every doctrine of Christianity; first, those doctrines peculiar to Christianity and then those precepts common to it with natural religion.—Coleridge. (7) This Epistle is the epic of the New Testament; it is Paul's third heaven epistle; in it soars from the depths of ruin to the heights of redemption.—Pierson. (8) We have here (Zanchy) an epitome of the whole Christian doctrine and of almost all the chief heads of divinity; this Epistle presents (Pendleton) a happy combination of doctrinal, experimental, and practical topics.

7. Outline. According to the usual analysis this letter consists of two parts—doctrinal and practical, each section occupying respectively three chapters. "The first part contains a summary of the Christian doctrines taught by Paul, and is especially remarkable for the great prominence given to the abolition of the Mosaic Law. The hortatory part, so dear to Christians of every age, enjoins unity, the renunciation of heathen vices, and the practice of Christian purity."

Fifth-Sunday Meetings.

WATAUGA UNION MEETING.

The next session of the Watauga Union will meet with Poplar Grove church three miles south of Boone, N. C., on Friday before the fifth Sunday in December, 1895. Introductory at 11 o'clock a. m., by Rev. Jacob Younce, alternate, Rev. A. J. Harman.

First question: What is the true relation of Pastors and members, and the duties of each to the other? Speakers—J. F. Davis, A. Rotan, and J. M. Pane.

Second question: What is the relation of baptism to the Lord's supper. Speakers—A. C. Farthing, John Crisp, and Solomon Younce.

Third question: What are the popular objections to Baptist principles and practices? Speakers—J. J. L. Sherwood, J. H. Farthing, and Wm. Cannon.

Fourth question: Do the Scriptures teach that man is wholly mortal and will cease to exist as a conscious being? Speakers—C. S. Farthing, L. C. Wilson and E. J. Norris.

Fifth question: Bible on women preaching and speaking in public assemblies. Speakers—J. C. Harman, E. M. Gragg, and L. W. Farthing.

Sixth question: Is it the duty of Baptists to teach their distinctive views? Speakers—J. F. Eller, J. J. T. Reece, and John Norris.

Your committee would say to all come: come, having carefully and prayerfully studied the questions, so as to be as well prepared as possible to glorify God and advance His Kingdom in their discussion.

From the Goldsboro Pastor.

Dear Recorder:—Am glad to hail again from the Old North State. After a three years stay beyond her borders, it seems natural and pleasant to be home again, especially when received so heartily as I have been. Any token of appreciation or trust only makes me feel the need of my Saviour more. Without him we can do nothing. Through him we can do whatever he would have us do.

Am glad my fortune is so great as to be settled in Goldsboro. Find everything here delightful. Owing to the confused state of things for the last eight months, Baptist interests have been at a standstill in Goldsboro.

Both churches have been without settled pastors most of the year. Think Bro. A. J. Taylor has accepted a call to the Second church. We hope now by a steady pull and hard work that the Lord will do great things for his people in our town. I find a noble band of Baptist brethren and sisters here. But we need what is needed everywhere—something for everybody to do, and everybody doing something, for the Lord.

The Woman's Missionary Society is very active. They have raised thirty dollars for the Yates Memorial Fund. Also by the aid of the church they sent a box valued at sixty dollars to a frontier missionary. We wish more of our ladies were members of this Society.

The Ladies' Aid Society is untiring in its efforts. It carpeted the church in the summer. Two weeks ago it gave us a rare treat. Bro. B. W. Spilman, under its auspices, delivered at the Opera House his excellent lecture, "Laugh and Grow Fat."

Our Sunday school reached its high water mark, for this season, Sunday, Dec. 1st.

The State Sunday school Convention met in our church last week. It was held in our church because our house (though unpretentious on the outside) has the largest seating capacity and best acoustic properties of any in town. As Baptists I think we are losers in co operating with the movement, especially since our denominational Sunday school work is so well organized. Still, I think the general Sunday school information given during its sessions will do good in our congregation.

We had a very pleasant Thanksgiving service, and took a good collection for the Orphanage. We hope to organize our young people as soon as we get a little better acquainted with each other. So far my work has been very encouraging. We have not had running-over houses, but a good comfortable house full at almost every service. Apparently our congregations are on the increase.

Excuse me for writing in so personal and local a way, but I have not known how else to tell what I desired to say. Success to the RECORDER. Hope we can give you some new subscribers for the new year.

JAMES LONG.

Pastor's School

The second session of the Pastor's School in Mercer University will open Jan. 8th, 1896. Last session we had thirty-two pastors in regular attendance. The result was such that no one is in any doubt as to the value of the work done. We had brethren of all grades of culture—graduates, undergraduates and brethren who had never before seen a college. Some who began with us have gone on to the Seminary to my great delight.

The scheme of this School is to provide practical instruction for ministers already in the work and who cannot break up their pastorates and go a whole year to the Seminary. The instruction is given in lectures, in plain language, and on topics which concern the every day work of pastors. Such topics as the Bible, its inspiration, its structure, how to study it; texts, how to select them, study them, interpret them, work them into sermons, and how to deliver sermons; churches, their constitution and culture. Soul winning, and matters pertaining to the preacher and his work in general.

The School will be under my direction, but several very able men will assist me. The session will last two months, and all instruction will be free. Board will not cost over $25 00 for the entire session.

If there are brethren in the Old North State who could spare the time to be with us, I can assure them of a cordial welcome. Let any such write to me, and I will look after their comfort.

Brother editor, this is a move to help as noble a body of God's servants as live on the earth. I can but think it vastly important. It arms soldiers on the field and in the fight with better weapons and imparts strength to their hearts. Last session was marked throughout by great spiritual power. We expect to do nothing without the Spirit, but much by His help.

It is often a mystery how a cold has been "caught." The fact is, however, that when the blood is poor and the system depressed, one becomes peculiarly liable to diseases. When the appetite or the strength fails, Ayer's Sarsaparilla should be taken without delay.

LITHIA WATER

Nature's Great Remedy in Uric-Acid Diathesis.

Stated by Dr. E. C. LAIRD, Haw River, N. C.

Gov. Thomas M. Holt, of North Carolina, a patient with strongly marked Uric-Acid Diathesis, suffered frequent attacks of Nephritic Colic, and at the same time a severe Gouty affection. Except as to the usual treatment for the relief of present paroxysms, I put him exclusively upon BUFFALO LITHIA WATER Spring No. 2, which has been attended with happy and remarkable effect, both as to the Calculus and Gouty affection. Under its action he has at various times discharged large quantities of Calculi and Sand. The deposition of fine sand not infrequently exceeded a teaspoonful. Under microscopic examination it was evident that the Calculi were originally parts of larger formations which had been disintegrated by the action of the Water.

What Governor Holt Himself says:

"I do not at all doubt that my life was preserved by BUFFALO LITHIA WATER which I must regard as one of the most wonderful Waters of the World."

This Water is for sale by druggists generally, or in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles $5.00 f. o. b. at the Springs. Descriptive pamphlets sent free to any address.

A Christmas Reminder.

APPEAL FOR A CHRISTMAS OFFERING TO CHINA.

How touching is the appeal God makes to us through his Psalmist in the hundred and third psalm. "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits." If any one but God had dictated that, I think it would have read, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and remember all his mercies." But God knows his frail, ungrateful, forgetful creatures. With a mighty fitting of his greatness to our incapacity, he pleads that while his mercies stand in forgotten thousands around us, we will remember some—some few, a little company in the multitude that wall us in from death, danger and destruction. He seems to say, "Forgetful child, to whom my every thought to you-ward is a thought of blessing, stop, forget all." Nor could we if we would remember all his mercies—those that "are new every morning," that fill the eventide with light; and make the darkness vocal with the songs he giveth in the night. David, the tried and often afflicted, saw a little of their number when he exclaimed, "How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O God; how great is the sum of them. If I should count them, they are more than the sand." For these multitudinous thoughts to us, shall we not think back thoughts of praise? Shall we not sing with David, "In the multitude of my thoughts, his comforts delight my soul!"

The age is thoughtless. We read, we hasten, we contrive; we spare no time to think. We know but few of the books that make up the celestial library, but of one special edition we are told. It is a book of remembrance that was written of them "that feared the Lord and that thought upon his name."

Since God so values thoughts of him, I call upon you, as the Christmas tide approaches, to remember. Day melts into day, and, it may be, we think not; but one day in the year brings us all to pause; the recurring anniversaries of our birth brings thoughts to the most thoughtless. Choose now, to lighten up the fading pathway of your past and bring out from the brightness of the blessings by the way, a woman of your own age from the millions of the heathen women of China. Mark out as fully as you can her life, year by year, by yours. Be she the happiest of her race, darkness stands over against light; woe against happiness. What maketh you to differ? It is summed up in one word—Christ. In his birth was bound up every blessing of your recurring years, a godly heritage, a welcome birth, a joyous childhood, a happy girlhood, honored motherhood, cherished old age. Christ's birthday has brought us every birthday blessing. Christmas brings the time of his birth ever to mind. It is fitting, then, that we should bring offerings of thanks and praise for all the blessings of our years through him.

Year by year the Baptist women of the South have joined with a week of prayer for missions, a Christmas offering. This year in the midst of the precious week of prayer, you are asked to make a Christmas birthday offering to China, for its millions without Christ. That our years may shine out as radiant cycles of blessing and our hearts be touched to pity, the Christmas program is a portrayal of the life of Chinese women.

Let me urge every woman who reads these words to turn aside for a little while and think of all the blessings of her way, and thinking determine that in her society, or, at least, in her home the first week of the new year shall be given to thoughtful, thankfilled prayer coupled with an offering of "a penny, a nickel or a time" for every year her life.

Think on his mercies, forget not all his benefits, count a few grains from the seashore as sands of blessing until the joy wells up and fills our hearts with praise to overflow in deeds of mercy as we sing:

"Were the whole realm of nature mine
It were a present all too small,
Love so amazing, so divine,
Deserves my heart, my life, my all."

FANNIE E. S. HECK,
Prest. Woman's Missionary Union

Missions in the Southern States.

A GLANCE AT THE FIELD.

First, let us make a mental excursion over the field. Start in Baltimore and go westward, passing through Washington, D. C., Covington and Louisville, Ky., St. Louis, St. Joseph, and Kansas City, Mo., Denison, El Paso, and San Antonio, Tex. We have thus skirted the land borders of the territory of the Southern Baptist Convention. Throughout its entire extent we find a large foreign population. All the cities named abound in Germans, as also the States of Missouri and Texas.

Again, begin in the mountains of West Virginia, travel southward through Eastern Kentucky, Western North Carolina, East Tennessee, and Northern Georgia and Alabama. On the mountains throughout this entire region is a population which the Baptists of all people should reach. Thousands of them are already Baptists, but they need developing, and many thousands more are wholly unevangelized.

Once more, cross the Gulf States from east to west, and you pass through a teeming population of colored people. Off in one corner in the western part of our territory are the Indians. In another corner in the South is New Orleans, with its vast Catholic population, and around it the great State of Louisiana.

INFLUENCES AT WORK.

Foreign ideas are at work. The foreigner is not, in the nature of the case, in sympathy with American institutions fully. The process of assimilation is necessary. The Germans on the outskirts of our territory believe in the German and not the American Sabbath. The South is now recognized as the best Sabbath-keeping section of our country. An orderly and reverent observance of the Sabbath is a part of the priceless heritage from our fathers. Yet influences are at work slowly undermining it. Roman Catholicism is at work. Millions of dollars have been recently appropriated for colored schools and churches in the South by the Romish hierarchy.

The various Protestant denominations are at work in the South. We rejoice in all the good they may do. But as Baptists we should be provoked to renewed zeal by the aggressive policy of our brethren of other names. The Congregationalists are making a vigorous effort in the mountain regions named above.

The industrial revolution is producing marked changes in the South. All the forces are moving with accelerated speed in all departments of life. The Atlanta Exposition is an index of the new ambition and throbbing life which has entered into our people. Only a quickened pace on the part of Baptists will enable them to keep abreast of this forward movement. No religious denomination can regard with indifference or complacency any great forward movement in any department of life around them. The religious life is inevitably affected by such movements. The very progress the South is making along material lines is a menace to the spiritual life of the people. When men become engrossed in the pursuit of wealth their supreme peril is the neglect of Christian obligations. This centrifugal tendency away from Christ can be counteracted only by a centripetal tendency toward Christ. And the shortest line to the heart of Christ is to be found by reaching out after the perishing. The way to rise spiritually is to go down to save the lost. A mighty wave of missionary activity, which shall be followed by other waves, and which shall at length become a tide rising higher and higher—this is the only salvation from spiritual paralysis which is threatened by the general quest for material good things.

THE BAPTIST CALL TO THIS WORK.

Have we this call? Are there special reasons why we should prosecute it with vigor? We think there are.

First of all, the South is our stronghold. We have been a numerous and a strong people in the South a long time, but not under conditions which are now shaping themselves. We have been largely a rural people, and the very bone and sinew of our denomination have come from country districts. But in addition to this, we must become a town and city people as well. We must bring the salt of the gospel to the masses of humanity which need its savor. We must become a city people, and yet relax none of our adherence to truth. We must resist the social wiles which imperil us, and the financial snares which allure, and the low, worldly type of Christianity sometimes seen in cities, which chills and blights, and yet we must take the cities. We must adjust our methods to this end. We must hold up our denominational head in the cities and plant our banner on the best corner lots. Abating no jot of our loyalty to Christ and his truth—nay, rising to our true measure of loyalty for to-day—we must arouse ourselves and confront the conditions around us. Towns which a few years ago numbered a thousand people now show on the census ten and fifteen thousand. Country cross roads stores have expanded into respectable towns and villages.

Then, again, our principles accord with the genius of our people, their love of freedom, their self reliance and independence. The germs of popular government are in the Baptist churches. Whether a Baptist church furnished the suggestion to the framers of the Constitution or not, it is quite possible that our denomination may become the bulwark of safety for free institutions.

Then, besides, God is giving us the men to preach, the money to support them, and glorious opportunities. Shall we rise to the occasion? May God enable us by his grace.

From Durham.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—The death of Bro. Durham caused great grief to many hearts in all parts of the State, but nowhere was the news received with such general and profound sorrow as in Durham. Here he lived longer after his ministry began, here he performed the most laborious, and I believe eternity will reveal, the most fruitful work of his ever earnest and faithful life, and here he impressed his strong and noble character on more lives and enshrined his memory in more admiring and loving hearts than anywhere else. We felt it eminently appropriate and thought it would be profitable to have a public memorial service in his memory. We did so last Sunday morning. A very large congregation assembled. Bro. J. L. Markham led in a tender, reverent, earnest prayer; I read several selections and one passage which Bro. Durham read and commented on at his last visit, in August, at our prayer-meeting. I preached from the text, "But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself," &c. Acts 20: 24. This led me to dwell especially on the four most conspicuous traits of his character—candor, courage, unselfishness and submission. The deepest and most tender interest pervaded the large audience as we wept and prayed together, and thought and spoke about the great and good man, and brother beloved, whom God has taken from us. We have arranged to make a special contribution to State Missions, as I trust many other churches have done. And we have decided to put some permanent memorial of Bro. Durham in our new church. It will be either a memorial window or a tablet. A committee has been appointed to have this done. If any of Bro. Durham's friends in the State would like to make a contribution for this purpose we will very cheerfully give them this privilege. We do not mean to make any appeal for help; but we think there may be, and doubtless are, many who would like to join us in erecting a permanent memorial to the memory of one who was so faithful and useful, and one we all so much loved and honored. Any such contributions will enable us to make the memorial more worthy of our brother than we can otherwise do. Contributions for this memorial can be sent either to me or to Bro. R. T. Howerton, chairman of committee.

The work on our church building is progressing very satisfactorily. As it assumes shape and proportions and begins to appear as it will be, it is already very much admired, and we think it will be a most admirable structure. Our new mission chapel at the Erwin cotton factory will be dedicated next Sunday evening. This makes the fourth Baptist church in Durham. Bro. Smith, who has been called and accepted, will begin his work there the first of January. He will find it a splendid field for usefulness. Bros. Dowell and Horton and I are truly glad that we are to have him as a co laborer. Fraternally yours,

W. C. TYREE.

Things Worth Knowing.

1. The American Baptist Publication Society, either at its home office, 1420 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, or at its Branches in New York or Boston, Chicago or St. Louis, Atlanta or Dallas, will gladly furnish any proper book at the lowest possible price. We are booksellers as well as publishers.

2. If you do not happen to know just the book you want, give us an idea of the subject, and we will try to send you the information you need.

3 If you are seeking Reward Books we shall be glad to counsel you in their choice. Tell us for what sort of people they are intended, and the amount you care to expend, and we can point out just the books you want.

4 A careful and competent committee examines every Sunday school book as soon as it is published. We cast aside those which are not just right, and keep a list of those which are approved as unquestionably fit for a Baptist Sunday-school Library. Nobody can have a copy of that list, but we will fill orders for Baptist Sunday-schools from it, with our guarantee. If there is any reasonable objection to any book, we will exchange it or return the money.

5. We would rather sell a Bible than any other book. So we keep a very large assortment of Bibles, in all types and styles of binding, and at the lowest prices. We have more reason for wanting to sell Bibles than any other bookseller can possibly have.

6. We shall be glad to have some person in every church to act as our agent in selling our books. We are ready to pay a very liberal discount for vigorous service.

His Will.

Whate'er my Father wills is best,
Delight or suffering, toil or rest—
Thine eye, and Thine alone, can see
What I should have, and do, and be,
I only ask that I may know
The way which Thou wouldst have me go;
That I my will in Thine may lose;
That what Thou, Lord, for me shalt choose,

—The Outlook.

Goodness expands the heart and makes it humble. The larger, the better, the nobler your heart is, the more you will be inclined to make allowance for others, and the more you will say and feel, "God, be merciful to me a sinner!"—Robertson.

Dr. Hartman Says.

NOW IS THE TIME TO GUARD AGAINST COLDS—THE FIRST COLD WEATHER.

In a recent lecture at the Surgical Hotel Dr. Hartman is reported as saying that no one need catch cold if he is willing to give the matter slight attention; that a cold is the beginning of chronic catarrh, consumption, disease of the liver, stomach, kidneys and pelvic organs. All this could be prevented by taking his advice. The doctor's professional duties compelled him, for many years, to be much on the road night and day, by carriage, railroad and steamboat. During all this time he never caught a cold. This could not have been done without Pe-ru-na, he says. At the slightest evidence of a cold a few doses of Pe ru na invariably check it.

This is especially seasonable advice, for the cold winter is here, with its storms, sudden changes, slop, rain and snow. Thousands of people will contract diseases from which they will never recover, by catching cold. Dr. Hartman's advice should be heeded. Pe-ru-na cures catarrh of any stage or location. It is the most popular remedy for la grippe, coughs, colds, etc.

Send for a free copy of an illustrated book on catarrh. It contains sixty-four pages of valuable instruction. Address The Pe-ru na Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio. Ask your druggist for a copy of The Pe-ru-na Almanac for 1896.

From Rev. J. W. Powell.

Six years ago the writer, while pastor at Rocky Mount, through the suggestion of Bro. Joe Coley, went out near Bro. Coley's home to preach in an old gin-house with slabs for benches. The writer preached at this as well as at two other mission points while he remained pastor at Rocky Mount. After he left, Bro. Sledge took hold of the Coley mission, and by continuous, earnest and prayerful work, a church—Stony Creek by name—was organized. On last Sunday the brethren dedicated a handsome church-house completed, but not painted, and entirely free from debt. The writer, by request, preached the dedicatory sermon from Matt. 16: 18.

I hope I do not speak too complimentary of one nor derogatory of another, when I say that if the other two stations could have had a Bro Sledge to take up the work where the pastor left it, perhaps the brethren at those stations would have been able to dedicate a church house also. Bro. Sledge has done this kind of work in Nash county several times before. He is an earnest worker.

Stony Creek church starts out well, and for two years has been the only church in the Association that pays its pledges in cash as it makes them.

Brethren, this shows what State and Associational missions can do, and are doing in our destitute sections.

This calls to mind an instance in the life of our late Bro. Durham. We were sitting side by side in the Association at Scotland Neck, when pledges were being made by the churches for State Missions. As Stony Creek was called on for the first time to pledge, Brother Coley arose and said, "We pledge nothing, but here's ten dollars for State Missions." Bro. Durham looked at me surprised (for it was during the panic), and asked me, "What church is that?" I told him it was the Coley mission station that I preached at while at Rocky Mount. I shall never forget his reply, and the expression of gladness that crept over his face, as he remembered the work was at the time under the Mission Board. That look satisfied me that Bro. Durham's heart, life and being was wrapped up in the State Mission work. I do not believe in letting the love or memory of any man prompt us to do for our Master what he through his love constrains us to do; but let our hearts be so filled with the same love that fired Brother Durham's heart that will go to the Convention without debt on the State Mission Board, and select a bold and aggressive leader as his successor.

J. W. POWELL.

Sunbeams at Work at Apex.

Dear Recorder:—While the country, on yesterday, was observing "Thanksgiving" our village was not idle. The Sunbeam Society of our church under the direction of its President, Miss Alice Carter, aided by other friends, gave an interesting entertainment, consisting of music, recitations, etc., which were well rendered and adopted to the occasion.

To make our work complete upon this occasion, our pastor, Bro. A. C. Cree had been asked to bring us a speaker from the college. He did not miss his man or his people. Bro. T. B. Hill a ministerial student of Wake Forest College, was present, and delivered an address of great force, power and utility, upon the subject of "Christianity applied by natural means." The discourse was highly appreciated, and it was clear that Bro. Hill had won his audience to his views upon this subject. He closed with an earnest appeal for the Thomasville Orphanage, which was rewarded by a contribution of twenty five dollars. The subject chosen by Bro. Hill is one of great importance and he handles it well. I trust he will have opportunity to deliver this address (or sermon, if you choose), in many places.

The services of the evening were closed by singing the favorite doxology, and many went to their homes feeling that the Lord's work is the greatest of all work.

H. C. OLIVE.

Recalled Stormy Times.

"Well, that looks natural," said the old soldier, looking at a can of condensed milk on the breakfast table in place of ordinary cows that failed on account of the storm. "In the Gail Borden Eagle Brand we used during the war."

From Bro. H. B. Orrell.

Dear Recorder:—I commenced a meeting at Bunker Hill on last fourth Sunday, and it was such a precious meeting I hasten to write you an account of what the Lord has done for us.

We held prayer meeting Sunday morning, after which Bro. F. L. Fiddler preached to us. In the evening, the writer preached to a large congregation, and at early candle-light Brother Henry Sheets joined us and preached to a packed house, and he was graciously blessed in holding up Christ to the world. We again met on Monday morning, held prayer meeting service, and Bro. Sheets preached at 11 o'clock an able discourse. Another sermon was preached at two o'clock, and at night Bro. Sheets again preached to a full house, and the people were deeply interested, and many of them cried to know, as did the jailer, what they should do to be saved. They were pointed to the Lamb of God, and some of them were enabled to believe on Jesus and confess him as their Saviour.

Bro. Sheets became very hoarse and had to go home; but the Lord continued to bless us, giving large congregations and convicting a great many of their sins, who came forward for prayer. The meeting continued until Thursday night, when I preached to a crowded house. Many mourners cried to the Lord for mercy.

We had several conversions during the meeting. As a concluding service, we sang "Come, humble sinner, in whose breast," &c., and while we were singing this song, the entire congregation came forward and bade Brother Fiddler and myself farewell. Many shouts arose from the saints of God, and many of the unsaved said, "Pray for me."

I do not think that I ever witnessed such a meeting. I expect to preach there another year, and I want to build a house soon. I hope that a church will be organized some time, as there is some waiting for baptism. May the Lord bless his work.

Yours fraternally,

N. B. ORRELL.

A Remarkable Offer.

TWO QUARTERS FOR THE PRICE OF ONE.

The American Baptist Publication Society will put its periodicals to any school, not now taking them, at an introductory price of one-half the regular rates. That is to say, if any such school will send us the full price for the quarter ending March 31, 1896, we will continue the subscription without further pay until June 30, 1896.

We desire also to call attention to the reduction in price of the Advanced Quarterly and Bible Lessons, and to the fact that, beginning with January, The Baptist Teacher will have a Missionary Department. Miss Mary E. Wright, of Georgia, will report for the Southern Baptist Convention, Rev. F. S. Dobbins, for the Missionary Union, and Rev. J. W. Weddell, for the Home Mission Society. A view will thus be given of all Baptist missions, Home and Foreign, North and South.

Send orders early to nearest branch house or Philadelphia.

Samantha in Europe Josiah Allen's Wife's GREAT NEW BOOK

700 Pages of Fascinating Interest and Rollicking Fun. Over 100 Comical Drawings, by the famous Artist and Cartoonist, C. de Grimm. The adventures of this droll pair, Samantha and her faithful pardner Josiah, in strange cities, royal palaces, and out-of-the-way places were most strikin' and skairful and also humorous in the extreme. Their trip was one round of excitement. The book that describes it is bound to make a sensation. The Josiahvilliana and the rest of the world will split their sides laughing. It is an ideal book for Christmas, in its elegant bindings. Prices by mail or through agents, cloth (gold, silver, and black), $2.50; Half Russia, $4.00. Elegant Prospectus and outfit, $1.00. A big bonanza for Holiday trade. Everybody wants the book. Half a million copies will be sold. You can earn $300 to $500 before Christmas. Send for terms and territory.

Caused by Vaccination.

From the Journal, Detroit, Mich

Every one in the vicinity of Meldrum avenue and Champlain street, Detroit, knows Mrs. McDonald, and many a neighbor has reason to feel grateful to her for the kind and friendly interest she has manifested in cases of illness.

She is a kind hearted friend, a natural nurse, and an intelligent and refined lady.

To a reporter she recently talked at some length about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, giving some very interesting instances in her own immediate knowledge of marvelous cures, and the universal beneficience of the remedy to those who had used it.

"I have reason to know," said Mrs. McDonald, "something of the worth of this medicine, for it it has been demonstrated in my own immediate family. My daughter Kittie is attending high school, and has never been very strong since she began. I suppose she studies hard, and she has quite a distance to go every day. When the smallpox broke out all of the school children had to be vaccinated. I took her over to Dr. Jameson and he vaccinated her. I never saw such an arm in my life and the doctor said he never did. She was broken out on her shoulders and back and was just as sick as she could be. To add to it all neuralgia set in, and the poor child was in misery. She is naturally of a nervous temporament and she suffered most awfully. Even after she recovered the neuralgia did not leave her. Stormy days or days that were damp or preceed a storm, she could not go out at all. She was pale and thin, and had no appetite.

"I have forgotten just who told me about the Pink Pills, but I got some for her and they cured her right up. She has a nice color in her face, eats and sleeps well, goes to school every day, and is well and strong in every particular. I have never heard of anything to build up the blood to compare with Pink Pills. I shall always keep them in the house and recommend them to my neighbors."

Dr. Williams Pink Pills for Pale People are considered an unfailing specific in such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after-effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, that tired feeling resulting from nervous prostration; all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of whatever nature. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 cents a box or six boxes for $2 50—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

Thanksgiving in Henderson.

Dear Recorder:—Smiling skies and balmy air as well as earnest men and women and happy children responded to the call of the President for a universal expression of gratitude to the Most High for rich harvests and abounding prosperity. At 11 o'clock a. m. on Thursday in our little city, a union service was held in the M. P. church, and, after the usual preliminary exercises, Rev. Dr. Morton of the Presbyterian church preached to a large and inteligent audience from Lev. 25: 10. Those who have heard Dr. Morton need not be told that the sermon was most edifying and that the hearts of his hearers were touched by its tenderness and pathos.

In the evening at 7:30 o'clock p. m. in the Baptist church, there was a Ladies' Memorial song service. The following program, prepared by W. M. L, was effectively rendered by the choir under the direction of Mrs. Laura Millard Jones:

1. Anthem—Softly now the Light of Day. Choir.
2. Hymn—My country, 'tis of thee. Congregation.
3. Solo—Unanswered.
4 Anthem—O, that men would praise the Lord! Choir.
5. Scripture reading and prayer.
6 Song—Jesus, Saviour, pilot me.
7. Address by the pastor.
8. Hymn—On the mountain top appearing.
9 Collection for Yates' Memorial.
10. Solo—The holy city.
11. Anthem—Praise waiteth for thee. Choir.

In addition to the printed selections, the pastor, Rev. Junius W. Millard, in style peculiarly in keeping with the spirit of the majestic, sonorous German music, sang that grand old hymn of Martin Luther's, "A mighty fortress is our God." His address—subject, "The Life and Work of Dr. and Mrs. Matthew T. Yates"—was replete with happy incidents in the lives of these devoted missionaries. He knew their history; he was in touch with the enthusiasm and energy which characterized their labors, and his impassioned words called forth a corresponding sympathy and interest in the hearts of his hearers. He made a stirring appeal to Christians, especially Baptists, in view of the wonderful success which has crowned their efforts both in the home and foreign field, to "go forward" even as did the children of Israel at the command of Jehoveh, with the sea in front of them, stern mountain barriers on either side, and Egypt's hosts pursuing. In conclusion, he commended the women for their zeal in the cause of missions, showing how seemingly heavy burdens rightly borne become blessings.

This week our church has raised fifty dollars for State Mission debt, ordered new song books for the Sunday school, sent off a valuable box to our Orphanage, and the W. M. S. has forwarded $8 60. Christmas offering, to China, and $10 00 for Yates Memorial. M. Parham.

Henderson, Nov. 30, 1895.

Baptist Sunday-schools will find the graded periodicals issued by the American Baptist Publication Society to be the most complete that are published. They are sound in doctrine, attractive in style, and of great excellence throughout. Superintendents who would be thoroughly equipped for the best work should not fail to order a sufficient supply for their schools.

MARRIED.

CAVINESS—LEONARD—On Nov. 23d, 1895, near Lane's Mill, in Chatham county, N. C., by Rev. O. T. Edwards, Mr. C. H. Caviness and Miss Lydia Leonard.

WALKER—CARTER—On Nov. 27th, 1895, at the home of the bride's father, by Rev. J. T. Riddick, Mr. Jesse Walker and Miss Laura Carter, both of Woodsdale, N. C.

HESTER—MELVIN—On Oct. 2d, in Elizabethtown, N. C., at the home of Geo. F. Melvin, Esq., the bride's father, by Rev. William Brunt, Mr. R. J. Hester and Miss Rena G. Melvin.

DIED.

SMITH—Little Rosa Smith, daughter of William Smith, passed quietly away in her fifth year, Thursday, Nov. 14th, 1895. The writer preached her funeral from Phil. 1: 21, "To die is gain." She was laid to rest in the old family graveyard to quietly await the resurrection morn. Geo. W. White.

BUNCH—Viola Elizabeth Bunch died at the home of her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Bridgers, Lewiston, N. C., in her sixteenth year. Sister Bunch died in full assurance of hope and in the fellowship of Republican Baptist church. May the Lord comfort the hearts of her mother and aged grandparents. Her funeral was preached by her pastor "Not dead, but sleepeth." L. M. Curtis.

HOCKADAY—On October 5th sister Sallie Hockaday, wife of Bro. W. F. Hockaday, departed this life. She was about thirty-five years old, and had been a consistent member of Brassfield church since young womanhood. She was a beautiful Christian character, and adorned her life with the Christian virtues. Thus ends a grand, noble and devout life. God bless the dear bereaved ones.

Her Pastor.

Tributes of Respect.

WHEREAS, It has pleased God to call from our midst on Sept. 25th, 1895, our Bro. W. E. Richardson, M. D., and while the death of such a useful man is an unseen mystery, and so sudden, yet we bow submissively to his will, knowing that he doeth all things well.

Resolved 1. That in his death Clyde Chapel church and Piny Grove Sunday-school have lost a strong member and a faithful worker, and that the community has lost a good neighbor and loyal citizen.

2. That we, the church and Sunday-school, do deeply sympathize with the family and friends of our departed brother, and ask an Allwise Father to strengthen and comfort them in their bereavement.

3. That a copy of this be spread upon the minutes of the church, a copy be sent to the family of the deceased, and a copy sent to the Biblical Recorder for publication.

W. H. Hood,
C. T. Faison,
H. V. Bunch,
Committee.

Bro. Alfred M. Veazey was born July 25th, 1819, and died Sept. 12th, 1895, in the seventy-sixth year of his age. He professed religion in early life and united with Concord church, Granville county, N. C. and was an active, devoted church member to his death. For some years Bro. Veazey's health had been failing, and he was unable to fill his seat at church often, but he always sent a word of encouragement and love to his pastor and brethren. They all loved him; they went to him for advice.

During his last days he gave much of comfort to the bereaved, when apparently he needed it himself. Yet weak in body he was strong in spirit.

Bro. Veazey longed for all his children to be Christians. About a year before his death he said to his pastor, "I pray often for the conversion of the remaining part of my children, and I believe God will hear my prayers." He not only prayed for his children, but for his neighbor's children. He was a missionary in the true sense of the word. If an appeal came from any mission field or from any of our secretaries of the Convention it seemed to stir his whole soul, and he opened his purse and gave liberally and freely.

He was once elected moderator of the Flat River Association, but feeble health kept him from attending its sessions after that time. He rejoiced when his church invited the Association to hold her sessions, in 1895, with her, hoping that he could attend once more before the Lord called him home, but he was too feeble to attend, but his prayers were with the brethren.

For more than fifty years he was a constant reader of the Biblical Recorder. It, with the Bible, shaped and guided his life. He did not think the Recorder infallible, but he thought its teachings were right. Indeed, his was a beautiful life, full of love and labor. His death was but the laying aside the labor of life to enter the joys of heaven. Christ seemed to be uppermost in his thoughts. He is not dead, but only gone before to the rest and reward of the faithful.

While the death of Bro. Veazey is a great loss to us, we bow submissively to his divine will, knowing and believing that he doeth all things well; therefore Resolved 1. That in the death of Bro. Veazey our church loses an old and faithful member, and a true deacon who tried for many years to do the work assigned him.

2. That Concord church do deeply sympathize with the family and friends of our devoted brother, and ask an Allwise Father to strengthen and comfort them in their bereavement.

3. That these resolutions be spread on the records of our church to his memory, and a copy be sent to the bereaved family, and a copy sent to the Biblical Recorder for publication.

Jesus Helped.

I've news to tell you mother,
For I am head at school;
I have not missed a single word
Or broke a single rule.
Now let me whisper, mother—
For I think I ought to tell—
'Twas Jesus helped me study
And keep the rules so well.
I ask him how to do it,
And you see he taught me how,
And I shall ask him always
To help me just as now.

If.

If any little word of mine
May make a life the brighter,
If any little song of mine
May make a heart the lighter,
God help me speak the little word,
And take my bit of singing
And drop it in some lovely vale,
To set the echoes ringing!

If any little love of mine
May make a life the sweeter,
If any little care of mine
May make a friend's the fleeter,
If any lift of mine may ease
The burden of another,
God give me love, and care, and strength
To help my toiling brother!

The Present Woman.

"The present woman!' And I can fancy how my progressive reader will raise his or her hands in disgust, as they cry 'The present woman! Why you are behind the times! It is the new woman who is the subject of general interest. It is the new woman to whom the eyes of all the world are turned. How stupid and useless it is of you to try to direct our attention to anything less interesting."

Well, perhaps so; but for some reason—I don't know what—I never can find myself becoming unduly enthusiastic over that "new woman" who is to come. Perhaps the reason may be because of one present, middle aged woman to whom I find it necessary to give considerable attentin, and thus I have never really found time to become exercised over any other. Yet be that as it may, I am forced to confess that I feel very little interest in that much talked of female.

Of course I am well aware that this frank confession stamps me at once as being intensely common place, without even that lofty ambition to be something else than that which my Maker designed. But like the father of my country, I must confess the truth, be the consequences what they may.

But the present woman! My! But I am interested in her! The real, tangible, present woman, who needs must wash dishes, and write books, and clean house, and teach school, and wrap up little stumped toes, and stand behind counters, and rule in society, and patch little pantaloons and look pleasant when her back is ready to break, and say she is well when she knows it isn't so, and must bargain and scrimp to make one dollar do duty for three and will fib about her age and bear children, and rear them either for heaven or for hell!

Yes, I am intensely interested in her, for it does appear to me that she has about as large a job on her hands as she can, with perfect convenience to herself, undertake to manage. Poor thing! I can't help feeling a bit sorry for her; and all the more so because people are inclined to neglect or ignore her, so they strain their eyes and ears to note the approach of the woman of the future. But all the time whether with sympathy or without it, she must go on in her humdrum round of commomplace duties, which will, if she be but faithful and true, one day usher her into the land of the eternal delight, where never more will there be found a dish to wash, and where bursted buttonholes will be a thing unknown.

Now, it is this class of women who are my sisters. It is with this class of women that I love to neighbor and gossip about the weather, and who is going to marry, and the last new book or baby.

I have an idea that the new woman—if she ever arrives—will not need our help or sympathy; she will be sufficient unto herself. But the present woman is such a needy creature. She really needs the love of her husband and children and the sunlight of her home. She likes to know that the first two are noble and true, and that the last is the sweetest place in all the world to them. To attain the foolish, childish wish, the present woman is weak enough to sacrifice an immense amount of ease and comfort. She resigns without a murmur many a dainty trifle for her toilet, for which her feminine soul secretly yearns, that she may make the home look brighter to those for whom she lives.

I know it is the style to rail at the present woman and to call her frivolous and all unlike either the noble woman of the past or the glorious woman who is to come. But sensible folks—such as you and I—understand that this means nothing at all. Much as I love this world, I must confess that there are a few dissatisfied people in it, and they must attract attention to themselves either by sneers or growls. Once they tried to get the nice old world excited by their attempts to prove that marriage was a failure. But bless their miserable, fault finding souls! The happy young people just went on falling in love and marrying quite as tho' it were not a failure—and I don't believe it is. Then the wise (?) ones exerted themselves to prove that men were filthy masses of corruption, and that no pure-minded girl who respected herself would trust her honor or happiness in their keeping. But it was difficult for the sweet young girls who, all their lives, had been reverencing their fathers and idolizing their brothers, to believe they could be the gay deceivers so graphically described. And being silly sort of creatures, they foolishly argued that if their pure, sweet mother could trust their precious father, and if through a long life time he had proved grandly worthy of her sacred trust; and if their brothers were loyal and true—why then the dearly loved young lovers might prove the same. And it all ended in ordering the orange wreath and vail, and a white silk dree, and in the language of the dear old story books, "They lived happily ever afterwards."

And then the discontented ones tried to convince the women that they were being defrauded of their rights. But the pretty brides—God bless them—by this time were so busy and so happy with their babies, the like of which the world had never seen before, that they found neither time nor inclination to discuss their rights, and so, because a one sided discussion must needs die of itself, that subject also grew to be monotonous.

Now all the attention of the malcontents is centered upon the "new woman" that is to be.

Well, I deem this the best subject they have had. Let them give their Maker all the good advice as to his future work that they deem necessary. I am sure it will be appreciated as it deserves, and, of course, will be acted upon. In the meantime the present woman, with her needs and her fears, and her hopes, and her responsibilities and her possibilities, is here, and you and I can help wonderfully to lighten her burdens and to brighten her pathway. God bless the present women. And let all the people say "Amen."—Christian Standard.

How They Differ.

A man is a creature of cast-iron habits; woman adaps herself to circumstances; this is the foundation of the moral difference between them.

A man does not attempt to drive a nail unless he has a hammmer; a woman does not hesitate ta utilize anything, from the heel of a boot to the back of a brush.

A man considers a cork-crew absolutely necessary to open a bottle; a woman attempts to extract the cork with the scissors; if she does not succeed readily, she pushes the cork into the bottle, since the essential thing is to get at the fluid.

Shaving is the only use to which a man puts a razor; a woman employs it for a chiropodist's purposes.

When a man writes, everything must be in apple pie order; pen, paper, and ink must be just so, a profound silence must reign while he accomplishes th's important function. A woman gets any sheet of paper, tears it perhaps from a book or portfolio, sharpens a pencil with the scissors, puts the paper on an old atlas, crosses her feet, balances herself on the chair, and confides her thoughts to paper, changing from pencil to pen and vice versa from time to time, nor does she care if the children romp or the cook comes to speak to her.

A man storms if the blotting paper is not conveniently near; a woman dries the ink by blowing on it waving the paper in the air, or holding it near a lamp or fire.

A man drops a letter unhesitatingly in the box; a woman rereads the address, assures herself that the envelope is sealed, the stamp secure, and then throws it violently into the box.

A man can cut a book only with a paper-cutter; a woman deftly inserts a hairpin, and the book is cut.

For a man "good-by" signifies the end of a conversation and the moment of his departure; for a woman it is the beginning of a new chapter, for it is just when they are taking leave of each other that women think of the most important topics of conversation.

A woman ransacks brain trying to mend a broken object; a man puts it aside and forgets that for which there is no remedy. Which is the superior?—Minnie J. Conrad, in Lippincott's.

God tells us to love reproof. I don't know anyone who ever took rebuke better than Eli. "It is the Lord!" When Nathan said to David, "Thou art the man," he did not flare up as Herod did. No! he said, "I have sinned!" and went away to write the fifty-first psalm.—Andrew A. Bonar.

IT IS a good sign, that the people of the United States at large have not been interested in the organization or reorganization of the U. S. Senate. It is no matter to a man whose time is worth anything who waits on our Senators. They are abundantly waited upon, to be sure; and that is enough, without reading column upon column o random guessing who will be door keeper or secretary. It is a matter of spoils, and but for this there would be no reorganization. The complexion of a door keeper's politics is not likely to weigh in the progress of the affairs of any one beside himself and his dependents.

SECRETARY CARLISLE has informed Congress that $418 091,678 17 will be required to run our government in 1896—he figures it to the last cent; and makes out the account at an increase of $8,000,000 more than last year. Pensions will cost at least $140,000,000; and the Treasury department fully as much. War is put down to consume $54,489,143 45—not fighting, but preparing for war; and the Navy will cost $30,459,956 20 more. Congress will relieve us of $7,958,814 40 of our burdened treasuries; and Justice (courts, etc) is reckoned upon to need $7,618 000. That is the way the money goes. We cannot make intelligent complaint, since we have never run so large a business; but in our humble opinion based upon moderate observation, is that this country has too many party workers, too many pensioners and too many private appropriation schemes for its good. If economy were the rule in Congress, and parties did not have so many faithfuls to reward, that $418,000 000 could be reduced by half.

THE President's message to Congress is undeniably an able one. He will be remembered for many things, and one of them will be his long, clear and able messages. So much of the message is concerned with careful review of our interests in foreign affairs that it is poor reading to the average man. It is hard to tell what is interesting across the seas, or what is important. If there is a prize fight in America we are likely to get only five lines from Cuba or Armenia; but if there is no prize-fight or no other 'special' then the situation in those countries again assumes a serious aspect. So while the President does well to lay before Congress the details of boundary disputes, island rebellions, etc., we can afford to wait and see what will become of them before worrying ourselves with hundreds of conflicting reports. To return to the message: All the world is interested in financial utterances of the President; and the following extract clearly enough expresses his opinion: "I am convinced the only thorough and practicable remedy for our troubles is found in the retirement and cancellation of our U. S notes, commonly called greenbacks, and the outstanding Treasury notes issued by the government in payment of silver purchases under the act of 1890." He recommends that bonds be issued in exchange for this money—"long-term bonds, thus increasing their desirably as investments, and because their payment could be well postponed to a period far removed from present financial burdens and perplexities." Well, we do not know. We would like to see our currency on a better basis, but bonds are debts, and debts are certainly not the kind of basis we like. The President says he is willing to answer for his full share of the responsibility for the bond issues to keep up the gold reserve. That is like him. Although the people have been violent in their deprecations of bond issues, he stands up and mildly says he is willing to take his part of the responsibility and wait: He has great faith in his convictions. By the way, the last time we looked at the telegraphic columns of a daily the President's address was unknown—he was somewhere about North Carolina and Virginia gunning.

FOLLOWING the adverse report of the commission to look into the representations of the Nicaragua canal promoters, it has come out that sufficient money has been subscribed to finish the old Panama canal, the (we hope temporary) failure of which brought out such deep, disgraceful and general scandal in France a few years ago. If this is true, so much the better. There ought to be a way through; it would save ages of time and billions of dollars, from a commercial point of view. And even if the Panama promoters are not of our country, it is not to be feared but that our capital and influence and power, as a nation and by reason of private stockholders, will have sufficient recognition for all practical purposes. We will always be glad if this enterprise, either Nicaragua or Panama, can be consummated without exposing our nation to the entanglements and the dangers of private schemes and legislative "jobs."

SPEAKING from a secular point of view, it is apparent from the action and the spirit of the Baptist State Convention at Greensboro that the Baptists in North Carolina are determined to persist in their opposition to State-aid to higher education. Their principles are behind their opposition, and they will cling to them. It is worthy of note in this connexion that a gentleman of Virginia declared to the Convention that the same principles are finding lodgment in the minds of the people of Virginia; and also, that the recent Constitutional Convention of South Carolina emphatically refused, after a great struggle, to accept an amendment contrary to these principles. It is now a characteristic of the average Baptist in North Carolina that he is opposed to State aid to higher education; and misrepresented though he has been, as seeking the destruction of institutions, he is not the less sure of the justness of his contention or the ultimate prevalence of his principles.

THE State Normal (and Industrial) School is worth seeing. We went out twice. President McIver was more than courteous. We sat at a window and saw more than two hundred girls come out of a door, one after another; and half of them, if not three-fourths, were in skirts that scarcely fell below their shoe tops. These are the young women of whom the institution is making teachers and industrial (shall we say workers?) It is apparent enough that they are not even ready for entrance into a college or seminary or institute for young women.

We looked in upon a dining room which seats at one time 360 persons; there are 450 or more students in the institution.

Across the centre of the main building is written in bold letters, "State Normal School,"—not a letter for "Industrial." That is significant, even if it can be made to seem not a great matter in itself. It would be just as pertinent to leave out Normal, so far as the laws of North Carolina and the will of the people is concerned.

Connected with the institution is a graded school of 150 children, who are taught by certain young women of the senior class of the institution. This is for practice.

At first glance a well equipped institution crowded with women is a pleasing sight, but serious thought puts a new face upon it. Christian education in a State institution is impossible. Education without Christian principles is damaging enough to young men; but the very thought of it for women is appalling—not to mention the question of justice or expediency.

We would not remove a brick of the State Normal and Industrial School. We would not move against any appropriation that is necessary to the maintainence of the legitimate work of such an institution, but as it is, it is without the provisions of the charter, is encroaching seriously and unfairly and ruinously upon the province of other institutions, is either disregarding the principles of our religion and our government, or taking young women from Christian influences when they need them most.

AN advertising agent has just left our office. He came up puzzled; said he: "In the office which I have just left, the editor told me his paper's circulation amounted to 8,000, and the book-keeper ten minutes afterward put the figure at 4,500. Which am I to believe?" The circulation liar is proverbial. It is no joking matter. A newspaper that will lie in its manager's office can be bought in its editor's rooms—if the price is large enough. Above all things a newspaper's good name is most priceless. An editor should take as an insult any hint or suggestion that he is not as honest in his business as any other man. We all know how it is. Circulation lying is one of the sins whose commonness hides its hatefulness. It is a deplorable fact that publishers have to resort to affidavits, public investigations and guarantees. It seems to us that an editor who is worthy of his subscribers' confidence should be above the necessity of swearing to his paper's circulation or opening his books to the public.

Introductory Sermon of the Baptist State Convention.

Text, Isaiah 51: 1, 2—"Hearken to me, ye that follow after righteousness, ye that seek the Lord; look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged. Look unto Abraham your father, and unto Sarah that bare you; for I called him alone, and blessed him, and increased him."

God was cheering his captive people. They thought the Almighty had forsaken them and that all was lost. But he assured them that, while a mother might forsake her sucking child, he could never forsake them. Their names were written in letters of love upon his hands. He would restore them. Ah, said they, but we are only a poor remnant of the great and glorious nation, and the good days of many sons and daughters of God can never come again.

Yes, said he, they shall come, and the nations that oppressed you shall come to you, and I will lift up my hand to the Gentiles and they shall come and swell your ranks, and kings and queens shall strengthen you and shall seek favor at your hands.

Alas! said they, we are in captivity, held by the strong ones of earth, and who can take the prey out of their power? Ah, brethren, how prone we are still to magnify the difficulties. We really argue as if we wished to convince the Almighty that he can do nothing for us. And how gracious he is to reason with us and to explode our theories, drive away our hobgoblins and lead us to hope!

So the Lord said, "I am with you. I can take the prey out of the hands of the strong. I can do the impossible thing, and if you don't believe it, just look back and see what I did for Abraham and Sarah. Look unto the rock and the pit, for I called him alone and blessed him and increased him. Now will not this satisfy you of my power?"

My theme is, THE VOICE OF THE PAST, THE PARENT OF HOPE.

Not your individual past, nor that of your family, but of all the past. God does not limit us to the experiences of yesterday and the day before, but would have us roam over the hoary past and find cheer in whatever occurrence can give it. The prophet swept a period of 1,200 years and brought hope to them who feared the Lord. So you may do. God would have us make the past a theological argument and draw water out of its many wells.

He does not confine you to any age or character. Go to the garden of Eden or roam with the scattered pioneers, spend the night with Noah, eat a meal with Abraham, go to the cave with David, or lunch with raven-fed Elijah, follow the cloudy pillow, or go to the dispersed in Babylon—whithersoever you will, it is for you to feed on.

Get this conception of your privilege and many an Old Testament event and character will be to you as a table in the presence of your enemy.

You thought you were poor. You own no house and draw water from another's well, when behold, every well and spring and house in the past is yours. God invites his people to look back that they may be encouraged to hope in him; and whenever he invites, we can well afford to look. He told the bitten Hebrew to look to the brazen serpent and he found healing. He told the ends of the earth to look unto him, and lo, we have found a Saviour. Notice:—

IT IS BY LOOKING BACK THAT WE GET THE INSPIRATION TO HOPE FOR THE FUTURE.

Take your own life. You were born poor. Your opportunities were limited. Others were ahead of you and above you. Yet the fire of hope became kindled in your heart and you said, "I can be a man. I can be useful. I can rise out of these surroundings, bring sunshine to others and make the world better." That was a great hope. You were another man so soon as it was born in you. The world was new to you from that hour, and life had a new meaning. It has not only changed you, but it has had its influence upon your wife and children, your friends and associates.

Whence came that hope? From the past. Somewhere in literature, in song or in speech, the past had been uncovered before your eyes and you saw a life humble as your own, or sinful as your own, and you heard its story. That was the spring of your life. It was not your crib, or your hearthstone that made you: it was the past.

Go to the coast of Europe and notice the open sea in which her ships ride in winter. It is not due to the thermal lines of Europe, for her coast streams pour down from glaciers and snow-capped mountains, but rather it is due to the "Gulf stream" which has been kissed by the burning sun of another clime, thousands of miles away.

So it is with us. The courage, the enthusiasm, the victorious power with which you work to morrow may be drawn from the life of Abram, or David, or Paul.

So it was with Gideon, in a devastated land, oppressed hearts, dismantled homes, a people in weeping. There was nothing in the prospect about him to kindle one ray of hope, but his mind wandered back through the years gone, and he lit on the fact that the Lord had been his people's deliverer, and then hope kindled, and another deliverer for his people arose.

THAT GOD WILL NOT LEAVE HIS PEOPLE WITHOUT LEADERS.

Our hearts are especially concerned on this subject now. One of our mightiest, a prince in Israel, has fallen. O Durham! I was loving you more and more as I knew your zeal, your self-sacrifice, your love of our principles, your strength of conviction, your great power among the people who needed cementing as a wall!

What does it mean? Will God leave his people without a mighty man for the work? I can't tell when I look forward. I can't tell when I look about me. I must look back to find what his conduct has been in the past, and from that I must draw my conclusion.

When Moses fell, Joshua was ready. When Aaron died, his son was at hand. When Samuel fell asleep, Gad and Nathan arose to guide King David.

When Saul died upon Mount Gilboa, David had already place in the people's hearts and had done valiant service.

When Christ, the great teacher, died, he said, I will not leave you comfortless. The Father will send you another comforter. And so it always will be. Human comforters and leaders will always be raised up by the Holy Spirit to take the places of the fallen.

God's people are as dear to him to day as they were in the past, and he will raise them up one. The anointing of the Almighty is already upon him, somewhere minding the sheep or immersed in business he will be found.

Thus we have seen it. Wingate is gone, but Taylor is here. Broadus, the great preacher, is no more, but B. H. Carroll fills the land. Meredith and Bailey, who did so much for us as editors, have passed away, but a noble son of the latter is filling our hearts with his spiritual power. Carey, the noble pioneer of missions, sleeps with the fathers, but his mantle has fallen on a number of Elishas. So I bring you the gospel of hope.

IT IS WHEN WE LOOK BACK THAT WE CAN CORRECTLY ESTIMATE THE DIFFICULTIES THAT ARE BEFORE US.

There are difficulties looking us in the face. If you look at them forgetting the past, you will be discouraged. They are large and forbidding, and they chill the soul. They look up like mountains. What shall we do? Turn and calmly view them in the light of the past. Put them beside the difficulties you have overcome and see how soon light will begin to break.

When a boy you wished to jump a ditch. It was wide. How did you get courage to leap it? You called up the past. You measured the ditch with your eye and then mentally compared it with another leap that you had made, and so you jumped over.

When traveling in the mountains, how sharp they look, how openless they seem; but you compare them with those you have crossed, and so move on. Destroy memory and hope is gone forever.

So young David did. He compared Goliath to the bear and lion, and said, O King, I can slay him, too.

SO THERE ARE DIFFICULTIES BEFORE US.

Look at one in the way of our civilization, the liquor trade. It is a giant, a bloodthirsty, iron-heeled giant that boastfully stalks in our land; a mighty Vesuvianic cloud that settles down with stifling and death on business-house and home; a mighty Eurocylon that would pick up the ship of state and hurl it to ruin. It domineers politics, it runs the cities, it controls the Nation. It is manufacturing crime and lawlessness with increasing proportions. [The speaker gave some statistics from the North Carolina Baptist, which we have not been able to obtain.—EDITOR.] In some cities there is one saloon for every 150 persons, and one person out of every four is arrested for disorder or crime. When shall we get hope?

Stand for a while and contemplate some mighty evil of the past. Study the gladiatorial contests and shows of Rome when thousands of our Christian fathers perished. How was it removed? By the continued manufacture of sentiment against it. Christians preached and prayed against it, until a nation's conscience was aroused, and then it was closed.

So with this evil. The Word of God must slay it, and it will. But when? When we have taught it truly in every neighborhood and home; when the school shall teach it; when the press shall carry it upon its wings, and when we shall thunder it in our churches and brush arbors, until Christian men shall vote on Christian principles and not by political parties. Yes, it will come. God has a way of hearing the cries of people when evil reigns. He heard the cry from debauched Sodom, and from bloodthirsty Babylon and from degenerate Jerusalem. He heard the cry of the martyr, and put out the fires of persecution, and he will hear the cry from those who mourn over this evil. Oh praise the Lord, my brethren, for he ruleth among the children of men.

Shall we sink or shall we swim? Shall our schools live or shall they die? The future tells us nothing. It is an empty, speechless space into which the present shall be thrown until it is full, and then another future will be found.

The fundamental facts and principles which will guide in the solution of every difficulty have cropped out somewhere in the past, and to that outcropping we must go for intelligent guidance. As I take it, we are in the midst of a conflict of opinions; nay, more, it is a conflict of convictions—convictions which are sacred to us, and which we must nurse and maintain as we would our children.

We believe that Christian education is both a duty and a necessity, and that it must be conducted under Christian auspices by Christian men, and is within itself the saturation of the mental powers with the principles of revealed religion.

We believe that if the opinions of our opponents prevail, our denominational schools will crumble to ruin, and it will be as difficult to reach our citizenship as it is to weld cast iron.

If we will turn back one hundred years, we will find that our fathers were in the midst of a similar clashing of opinions. And what did they? They spake and taught their sentiments in a manly Christian way. They printed documents, preached, prayed, and then voted for their opinions until they prevailed. With the illustrious Patrick Henry, we may say, "There is but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience."

Ah, says some one, but this will stir the peace of the land, disrupt families and friendships, and degrade the churches. I admit that it will stir the peace and disrupt some friendships. But do you know what Christ said, "I am not come to send peace but a sword." The father shall be against the son, and the son against the father.

The introduction of principles has always been attended by the disruption of previous ties and friendships. When the time comes that our churches love peace better than principles, they will have lost their right to live. Christ has made his churches the storm centers of the world. Every needed revolution must begin there, every agitation against evil and every upheaving against wrong must begin there. Speak not of peace but of right, of conviction, of allegiance to Christ and to the best interests of humanity.

THERE IS A CONDITION THAT CONFRONTS US.

Our people are drifting from the country into the towns and cities. The old homes which were centers of Christian influence, whence come our strong sons and noble daughters; those homes which have been beacon lights for the stranger and bulwarks for the community are crumbling to ruins. The men of moulding character force and the women of polish have gone to the city. The strong country church has become a decrepid organization. Where men once preached to thousands, they now preach to hundreds.

New churches have been organized all around the old one, and while there are large numerical gains reported, the moulding strength of the past is gone. Why is this? The great country preacher is gone. He was the center, the magnetic center which held the school, the educated family, the social system and the vast congregation.

Just as the great preachers have left the great country centers, the people have broken up and drifted. Where are our men in country fields who correspond to Read, Harris, Waller, the Craigs and Creaths, to Lunsford, Andrew Broadus, Barnett, Grimsley, Poindexter and A. B. Brown among the Virginia Baptists? Where in North Carolina is the successor of Patrick W. Dowd, John Culpeper, Dobbins, Hicks, Ross, Posey, Trotman and Crudup?

We must get back. Our young ministers must not be taught that they deserve a broader field than the country church. It is the mighty field. A good country preacher can have the ear of more people than the average city pastor. He can do more to fix character. There are not so many counter currents. And there he is at the fountain head of the stream, for from the country homes comes the fresh blood to keep up the cities. Oh, that it may come pure and strong, fixed in faith and settled in character.

Go back, my young brethren, to the country pastorates; back to the hills and valleys when there the babbling brook, the cascade and the mocking-bird sing together; back to the sea shore whose thundering waves speak of God; back to where the odor of the pine is borne upon the breeze, and there, under the silent stars talk with God until you can pour your soul out upon a hungry people.

And now, brethren, when the hour of conviction comes to the soul on account of sin, when the thunders of Sinai were ringing in the soul, where did we go for hope? Within us there was only condemnation and despair, before us, there was not a ray of light. It was backward—backward to Calvary where the blood of Christ flowed, that our thoughts were directed, and resting upon that work done eighteen hundred years ago we found peace and hope. Bless his holy name, there is hope, then, for every condemned soul. And when we stand before the open grave as some dear form is laid away, whither do we go for anchorage for the grief-tossed soul? Again, we go back to the words of him who is the resurrection and the life, and in his own uplifting from out among the dead, we find the assurance of the awaking of our own dear ones. If Christ not been raised, so shall we the body be. Oh, blessed past! our assurance of a [illegible] triumphant future. May we ever [illegible] the fountain of comfort in Christ Jesus.

Christ taught us to [illegible] the truth, and life, and if we do, [illegible] law is eternal life.

The Biblical Recorder.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1895.

J. W. BAILEY, - - - - - EDITOR.
J. C. CADDELL, AGENT AND CORRESPONDENT.

"ADOPT some good plan and push it," writes Bro. A. D. Hunter to the pastors and churches of the Raleigh Association, of which he is vice-president for foreign missions. Adopt some good plan and push it, every pastor and church in our Convention. Let us make this year memorable for a step forward in the development of systematic effort in our churches.

LAST week time and space limited us strictly to a running account of the proceedings of the Convention. This week we print the introductory sermon, Miss MacLean's essay, constitution of Young People's Union, the report of meetings of the woman's missionary societies, the new boards, and such reports, committees, etc., as we think of interest.

WE print this week pictures of the founder and first editor of the RECORDER and of the late editor. Thos. Meredith was editor of this paper seventeen years; C. T. Bailey was editor twenty years. Their influence was as broad as the State and broader; and their names are familiar in every part of North Carolina. They rest from their labors; but their influence is ceaseless and unresting. We see them no more, but we are not without their help; their voices are silent, but their memory is eloquent; their hands are still, their work done; but we have the blessed heritage of their faithful prayers and the work which they have done in the Master's service.

WE WISH to make a rule; we hesitate because we know that it is hard to keep from breaking rules; there are so many exceptions and exceptional cases. It is this: That the editor of the RECORDER will not recommend any man, no matter how well he thinks of him, to a church as pastor before the church has asked him to name some one. An editor is generally better acquainted with more people than the average man; he is in position to see and hear a great deal of people unknown to the average man. It is clearly in the line of his duty to turn these advantages to the good of his denomination; and we will do this. But we shall not essay to advise a church in so grave a matter as the selection of a pastor, until we are asked either by the committee which has charge of the matter, or some responsible member.

NO ONE could value more than we the kind words which have been said of the RECORDER since the present editor took charge. We say this now for fear that failure to acknowledge them might suggest that we are inappreciative. By no means. It is not saying too much to say that but for the encouragement we have received since we undertook this work, we would have given it up. The letters that were sent to the late editor of the RECORDER in the last years of his life, the thousands of reassuring, comforting letters, and those which have come since, will never be forgotten. If in the future the way seem dark or hard, we shall look back to this time and take courage. We know of nothing more worthy of the Baptists of North Carolina than the manner in which they stood by their organ when the trusted editor had been stricken, those three years in which he struggled with ill health. The contributions to the RECORDER'S columns during that period, the letters of sympathy and brotherly love, and the efforts to extend the usefulness of the paper, were as many and as hearty as at any time in the history of the RECORDER.

The present editor has met with nothing but kindness from the beginning. The RECORDER went through the crisis almost without realizing it—those who had been contributors have kept on; and the subscription list is larger than ever. So far as we know there is no one but wishes us well. Our career up to the present time has been a series of revelations of the broad charity and sincere brotherly love of the Baptists in North Carolina. We are grateful to God for our friends, those whom we have seen or communicated with, and thousands of others whose sympathies go out to us for the Work's sake. We shall strive to live worthy of such a blessing.

Looking backward we can say with all [illegible], "Hitherto hath the Lord helped [illegible] far more than we could ex[illegible] so we now formally enter upon [illegible] which our life will be given, God [illegible] Redeemer upon our lips, we [illegible] the sunniest of the growing [illegible] sympathy of our brethren and sis[illegible] the South and strong in the

BAPTIST BROTHERHOOD

A clearly recognized function of the First Baptist Church in Jerusalem was mutual helpfulness in temporal things. For the prevention or relief of suffering, great sacrifices were made, not only voluntarily, but joyfully. Thereby was a great principle established.

Each local Christian church is from one point of view a benevolent society. When it became necessary in this church in Jerusalem, special arrangements were made for organization in adaptation to this special function. The office created thereby abides to the present day, though its origin is often lost sight of.

The very genius of Christianity demands that Christian churches, both individually and collectively, should have beneficence as one of their chief aims.

The Acts of the Apostles, and several of the Epistles, are instinct with the idea of Christian brotherhood. The Baptists of North Carolina are a Brotherhood. And they are only one division of a far wider Brotherhood. This thought is as inspiring as it is true. Perhaps it demands more recognition. We glory rightly in the independence of our churches. There is no less ground for rejoicing in the essential unity that pervades them all.

There are other benevolent societies and institutions and organizations of various kinds in the worlds, besides Christian churches.

Most of these are directly or indirectly the outcome of Christianity. In the course of time these seem to have drawn off from their original source, some, at least, of the interest and energy which are essential to the full discharge of all the duties of the churches. In other words, there is a tendency that our churches shall become less efficient as benevolent societies, and that their sense of brotherhood shall become obscured, if not lost, through the dissipation of spiritual energy and material aid, into other channels.

We have no controversy with those Christians who join other benevolent societies. Each must be persuaded in his own mind. That the objects of many of these organizations are praiseworthy, and that they accomplish good, we cannot doubt. But, that their aims are by no means as exalted, and that their influences is not as salutary as those of Jesus Christ's societies, we are quite sure. And of this also we are certain, that the claims which a Christian church has a right to make upon its members, are paramount. Where there is any conflict, the first and highest duty is to the church. And may it not be considered as at least an open question, whether a Christian may not find ample scope for all his charitable work and cravings for fellowship in his capacity as a church member? When we join other societies, or continue actively to affiliate with them, are we not virtually making a confession that the societies founded by our Lord do not furnish a sufficient arena for our beneficent activities, and do not satisfy our desires for fellowship and brotherhood?

It seems to us that a Baptist church ought to be made to do for its members and for society all that any local chapter can do, and far more besides. Why should it not be so, and why should we not aim for that larger sense of Brotherhood which would intensify the feeling of kinship among all true Baptists? No mystic signs or secret passwords should be needed now any more than among the disciples to secure sympathy and aid anywhere in the great Brotherhood. The truth is, we are prone to put too low an estimate on church membership and Christian fellowship. Could we realize the full significance of belonging to Christ's own societies, it would surely work a revolution. To alienate from the churches to which we belong any of our social influence, material aid, or working capacity, is to delay the coming of the kingdom. In proportion as we exalt the divinely organized churches, and concentrate our activities upon them, and pour our labors into them, will we enable them to solve the problems of society here and now, and to save men for time and eternity.

The good done by other organizations may be valuable, but it is superficial and temporal. What is accomplished by the churches of Christ is invaluable, for it is radical in nature and eternal in result.

"As we have opportunity, let us do good unto all (men), especially unto them who are of the household of faith."

Our Woman's Missionary Societies are to be congratulated upon the good showing they were able to make at Greensboro. Since the Centennial year we have noticed that the aggregate receipts through this source were decreasing, but this year a decided upward trend is apparent. We are sure the columns of the RECORDER devoted to this work were never so interesting and stirring as they have been this last year.

WE ARE looking forward to putting the ten thousandth subscriber on our lists in the coming year. If every present subscriber will send us a name, with fifty cents for four months, or a dollar for half a year with a Baptist almanac, we can reach this mark shortly. Will not the reader try?

Meanwhile it is necessary to say a word to certain of our subscribers whose time has expired. This is the season when we look for these to pay up and renew for 1896. Do not wait for a more personal reminder. There are many names which good business principles will compel us to leave with the old year, unless they are heard from.

AT THE time of the death of the late Secretary of our Board it was not known but that it had been arranged to pay out the full $15,000 which was recommended by the Convention and the Board to be expended this year. In fact, we have reason to believe that the late Secretary himself thought this amount would have to be contributed in order to report out of debt. But it turned out that the real basis of operations was little more than $11,000, and as that amount was raised no debt was reported this year.

For the coming year a basis of $15,000 has been authorized. Let us start out with the determination to raise this amount this year. We can do it.

NEWS NOTES.

....A new Baptist chapel has been dedicated in Winston.

....Rev. H. M. Croom has changed his address from Hartland to Granite Falls.

....Rev. E. J. Edwards of Williamston has become editor of the Eastern Carolina News.

....Rev. John C. Hocutt has moved to Graham, which is more convenient to his work.

....Dr. Geo. B. Taylor, perhaps the most distinguished of our foreign missionaries, is on his way back to Italy.

....We extend congratulations and best wishes to Bro. J. H. Vernon who was married near Durham last week.

....Among the probabilities is a Wake Forest Quarterly. We hope the plans for it will be successfully developed.

....Two candidates were baptized into the fellowship of the Raleigh First church on Sunday night last by the pastor, Dr. J. W. Carter.

....I congratulate the Baptists of North Carolina in having the services of Bro. John E. White as successor to the lamented Durham.—John C. Hocutt.

....We were glad to see Rev. J. T. Betts, recently of Asheville, at the Convention. He had just returned from a glorious vacation spent in the Holy Land.

....Hon. John C. Scarborough is acting as the Secretary of the State Board of Missions and Sunday-schools until January 1st, 1896, when Bro. White will take charge.

....The State Board of Missions and Sunday schools will meet at Raleigh, Jan. 7th, 1896. The work for the year will be mapped out, and the new Secretary will be present.

....The members of the Waxhaw Baptist church are erecting a handsome and substantial house of worship. The building is octagon in shape and will have a seating capacity of over six hundred.—Monroe Enquirer.

....Rev. I. W. Thomas preached a very able sermon to a large congregation at the Baptist church Sunday night. After services, a church conference was held at which Mr. Robert Jordan was licensed to preach.—Lenoir Topic.

....Rev. Samuel Saunders preached his last sermon here Sunday morning as pastor of the Baptist church. He is very much beloved here, many moist eyes were seen in the congregation as he spoke of the separation.—Seaboard cor. Patron and Gleaner.

....I regard the action of the Convention in the appointment of Bro. White as successor to the lamented Durham, as eminently wise and timely. Young, vigorous, progressive and pious, no interest committed to his charge will be likely to suffer.—J. F. Tuttle.

....We were glad to have visits from Rev. Junius W. Millard, Prest Charles E. Taylor, Rev. John E. White, Missionary Britton, Rev. J. N. Booth of South Carolina, W. B. Gilmore of Rives' Chapel, Bro. Yates, Bro. Ewing, Rev. O. L. Stringfield, Rev. J. J. Lansdell.

....Dr. T. T. Speight succeeds Rev. W. P. Jordan as pastor of Rockyhock church. Bro. Jordan was greatly beloved by this church, and appreciation was shown by the resolutions which we publish elsewhere, and also by the gift of a suit of clothes from the women of the church.

....In our issue of Dec. 4th we printed from the N. C. Christian Advocate the position held by Dr. J. C. Kilgo on Christian education, which is the same as that held by the Baptists of North Carolina. We are glad to note that the Methodist Conference now in session in Elizabeth City, N. C., has heartily endorsed as its future policy the position held by Dr. Kilgo. The Conference appointed a Missionary Secretary to look especially after the mission interest of the Conference. If the Conference is fortunate in the selection of a man, this is a long step forward, but what will become of the Presiding Elders? We have always understood that their chief business was to do mission work in the destitute fields.

....I desire the use of the manuscript records of the Pee Dee Association from its organization in 1816 to 1825, or the printed minutes of the same. I wish them a short while for historical purposes. If any one has them or knows of them, would confer a favor by corresponding with Rev. Henry Sheets, Lexington, N. C.

....Rev. M. P. Davis of Creedmore, N. C., and Miss Stella Kingann of Centerview, Mo., were united in marriage at Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 4. Bro. Davis graduated at Wake Forest last June. He is one of our safe and conservative young men, and promises to be very useful in the work. We welcome his bride to North Carolina and wish them a happy life.

....We had a pleasant visit from Rev. J. H. Vincent, District Missionary to the Negroes, last week. He informed us that the first of the New Era Institutes in this district will be held at Lumberton, beginning Jan. 8, 1896. Rev. M. L. Kesler, Rev. W. B. Oliver, Dr. H. L. Morehouse, President Meserve, and some of the prominent local brethren, will be there.

....The Commonwealth, the new Baptist paper of Pennsylvania, came for the first time to our table last week. It is seldom that a paper makes so attractive an appearance in its first number as this one makes. We infer from the address of the Commonwealth, that it is backed by the American Baptist Publication Society, although it is owned by a stock company; and stock is on sale.

....Richmond College announces the first course of lectures on missions, by Rev. E. Y. Mullins; subject, "The Missionary Interpretation of Christianity," to be discussed in three lectures, Dec. 12, 16, 19; first, "As Reflected in the Life of the First Great Missionary"; second, "As Revived in the Beginning of Modern Missions"; third, "As Embodied in the Triumphs of Modern Missions." This is a step forward, a mark of the progressive administration now in charge of old Richmond.

....We found brother and sister John A. Wray cozily housed in the Pastor's home in Milledgeville. Sister Wray has royal Baptist blood in her veins. She is the daughter of Professor L. R. Mills, who is Professor of Mathematics in Wake Forest College. She was born and reared in Wake Forest, N. C. She is a charming woman, both cultured and domestic. The meeting house is hardly big enough to hold the prayer meeting crowds, much less the Sunday congregations; people turned away.—Christian Index (Georgia).

....Rev. Duncan McLeod, who has served as pastor of the Baptist church here for two years or more, left for his new field, Windsor, Va., yesterday. We have observed him closely during his stay here, and he has ever proven himself a man of the highest Christian integrity, and most zealous in the cause of Christ. With almost every conceivable obstacle confronting him he has nearly completed a new church for the congregation, that will be an ornament to the town, and a monument to his indomitable energy. We regret deeply to give him up, but the kindest and best wishes of the entire community go with him. Our loss is Virginia's gain.—Washington Gazette.

....Very good meetings are now being held in the Tabernacle Baptist church, and we would not be at all surprised if they result in about doubling the membership of the church. Monday evangelistic services began with a talk by Rev. J. E. Hutson in the Sabbath school to the children prefaced by remarks to all upon God's plan and direction in his Word for little children to come to him. Mr. Hutson's plain easy-to-understand style fits him to talk to children as readily as to adults, and about twenty of the scholars including some adults made professions of conversion at the meeting, one of the best of its kind we have ever seen. Mr. Hutson preached both morning and night and several other conversions, nearly, if not quite all, being adults. At the evening service so many went that the house could not accommodate them—numbers had to be turned away.—Newbern Journal.

....We had a pleasant and instructive trip to Burlington, where the enlarged church was opened for the first time Sunday. Last year this time a debt of $700 on the old building was paid; and within a year that building has been so added to, that Pastor Van Deventer can seat as many hearers as any pastor in his part of the State. There is a basement and Sunday-school room besides. The Burlington people have done a great year's work under Bro. Van Deventer's leadership. Dr. Hume, who labored there himself to the delight of the people of the town four years ago, had been engaged to preach the sermon. He had a large audience, numbering between 700 and 1,000; and they listened attentively to the sermon and were unstinted in praises of it. Bro. Hume also preached at night to another large and appreciative audience. At the Young People's Meeting in the afternoon there were about three hundred people. Young Brother Alexander lead, putting forth some excellent and appropriate thoughts on thanksgiving. One after another of the young men were called on to read Scripture or pray, and they showed a readiness and an earnestness which would encourage any pastor. There was good, joyous singing. Several of the young men told of the work that was going on through cottage prayer meetings. This feature alone is worth the effort to organize a young people's society. The editor of the RECORDER took advantage of Bro. Van Deventer's invitation to speak on the "Value of Reading a Denominational Paper," and he was followed by Dr. Thos. Hume who made practical suggestions about young people's work. The people of Burlington are going forward; they are proud of their pastor and his good wife, and they love to talk their praises and to aid them in the work; and they are justly proud, too, of the great step forward which they have taken.

....We are glad to be able to announce that Bro. Alderman's suggestion in another column will shortly be acted upon. Rev. R. Van Deventer and Dr. Thomas Hume have consented to give the RECORDER the benefit of their experience in the work of and for young people, in order that pastors may be interested and guided in organizing societies, and also that those who have societies may have the opportunity of comparing methods and programs, and making and accepting suggestions. This will be a regular department of the RECORDER.

RALEIGH ASSOCIATION.

The meeting of this Association which was held at Hephzibah church has been left out, owing to the unusual demand made on our space in the past two weeks. It was the last Association held in the State, and we were delighted to see that in point of interest it stood among the very best held in the State.

The church is one of the best country churches in Wake county.

Some of the best laymen and preachers in State were at one time members of this church. No cleverer people met together than those we saw at this Association. They were once rich in lands and slaves;—the slaves are gone, but the land is better than ever before, and the farms, so far as I saw them, seem to be well cultivated and are yielding abundant crops.

Bro. H. W. Norris was elected Moderator with no opposition. Bro. J. C. Birdsong was elected Clerk and Treasurer to succeed Bro. Lougee, who died only a few days after the close of the Association last year.

The subjects were all ably discussed. For several years Bro. Broughton and others in the Association have given special emphasis to Associational missions. The progress of the present year is most encouraging, and the churches made liberal pledges for the coming year. Bro. Broughton's speech on this subject was strong and stirred the brethren as we have seldom witnessed.

Bro. Stringfield was at his former home, but he was none the less appreciated when he came to speak on the Female University.

The brethren were glad to see Bro. Boone, and hear him on the Orphanage. Bro. J. M. Hilliard who is known and much loved here, aided Bro. Boone in getting subscribers to Charity and Children.

Bro. Simms was at his best; his speeches on the BIBLICAL RECORDER and Home Missions could hardly be excelled.

Brethren Coppedge and Creech made some touching references to the trials and hardships which they have undergone while trying to do their work in the destitute fields in Johnston county. These are true men, heroes in the cause of the Master, and eternity alone will reveal the real worth of such men.

Bro. J. M. Beatty, who for years, has given largely of his time and money to have the gospel preached to those who have it not, feels much encouragement at the progress of the past year.

Bro. Pulliam, now at Smithfield, is getting a strong hold on that section. He is one of our best and safest men, and his work will stand the closest test.

I came away sooner, I guess, than I ought to have done; but what I failed to do, brethren Broughton, Simms and Pulliam kindly did for me. I got a large list of subscribers, most of them for a short time, but men like these ought to continue to read the RECORDER, and we shall be disappointed if they fail to renew.

NOTES

The Baptists in no other State are as loyal to their organ, as the Baptist of North Carolina are to the BIBLICAL RECORDER.—S. O. Ho Wilson.

I once had a property interest in the BIBLICAL RECORDER, but I never felt any greater desire for the success of the paper than I do now. I would rather give up every paper I read, than to be deprived of my church paper.—N. B. Broughton.

Many a man would give the last cent he he possesses if he could only reclaim a wayward boy. In many cases these boys would never have gone astray if their minds had been properly trained and their hearts cultivated by giving them proper reading. Brethren, no man ever touches the earth but once and then he is gone forever, let us die trying to pull the world to God.—Dr. A. M. Simms.

Easy, not Cozy.

Two or three months ago, returning from the King's Mountain Association, I wrote a note for the RECORDER about the meeting and, in closing, referred to the facility, as compared with former days, with which a student could now reach Wake Forest from any part of the State. The printer made me say that a student would have a cozy trip. I wrote "an easy trip." I have not held the good printer responsible, for I was writing in a swiftly moving car. But I have been saving up the little morsel of a mistake against the approach of a Spring Term. It will do for a sort of a text,—a springboard to give me a start in speaking of the Spring Term. And anent the text, I'll say, first cozy is not an appropriate adjective for the belongings and surroundings of young men; it has a feminine suggestiveness. Second, it is easy to go to Wake Forest. Third, it need not cost much after one gets there. Fourth, the Spring Term opens Wednesday, Jan. 15th. Some who can enter Wake Forest at that time may be sorry some day if they fail to do so.

CONVENTION NOTES.

You cannot be a Baptist and not be a patriot.—Prest. Meserve.

We are not educating men or women to get a living.—Springfield.

A church that loves peace better than it loves principle has lost its right to live.—Dr. A. M. Simms.

All of us can make preachers with the aid of a respectable tailor; but it takes God to make men.—Vann.

The initials of President Tucker of the Western North Carolina Convention are J. H., not F. P., as we stated.

The Conventional issue of the BIBLICAL RECORDER is the finest paper ever issued from a press in North Carolina.—Dr. Chas. E. Taylor.

A prominent Presbyterian in Greensboro said: "These Baptists seem to have more business to transact than any religious gathering I ever saw."

Among the many feeling tributes paid to the late Secretary Durham that of Dr Tichenor in his speech on Home Missions was not surpassed.

The Exposition of the Southern States at Atlanta is greater than the Centennial of the United States at Philadelphia.—Tichenor.

It is conceded that the South is the place to spin the cotton crop. We spin only one-twentieth of it now. We must do more than fell to our fathers to do.—Tichenor.

Wake Forest is now prepared to send forth men to honor her in the Law. Prof. Gulley's work meets with most enthusiastic approval from students as well as the faculty and friends of the college.—Carlyle.

I want Cary Dowd to introduce a bill in the next General Assembly to this effect: Hereafter, when any Baptist minister reaches thirty years of age and isn't turned out of church, let him be recognized as a D. D.—Vann.

Rev. John E White of Edenton, N. C., has been elected to succeed Rev. C. Durham, D. D., as Corresponding Secretary of the North Carolina Baptist State Convention. A most excellent appointment.—Religious Herald.

I am glad you do not have foot ball at Wake Forest. There was a game of football in Richmond Thanksgiving day that was a disgrace to the institutions. I would rather be smart a little higher up than in my toes.—Wright.

In politics, the way to get a thing is to vote for it; but in religion, to get a thing, we must pay for it as well as vote for it. If this work for missions is to succeed, we must put our hands deep down into our pockets and bring up the money.—J. W. Carter.

I rejoice to see this day. The co operation of the Baptists of the South with our brethren of the North in the education and evangelization of the negroes will show that we can work with our Northern brethren and still maintain the integrity and individuality of our organizations.—Dr. J. S. Felix.

We may over or underestimate the privileges of a theological seminary. It is not a place to make preachers—only a place to help them prepare for their best possible work. You may have all the theology you can drive in with a pestle, but without the grace of God in his heart you won't get a preacher.—Dr. E C. Dargan.

I look back upon the Convention as one of the very best I have yet attended, and that was my tenth in succession. The Spirit of God seemed to be with us. I am encouraged to attempt greater things for God in the future.—W. B. Morton. This was not written for publication; but it so well expresses what many of us feel, that we print it.

This is the only country in the world whose political institutions are in harmony with our Baptist teaching.—Tichenor.

Four men mortgaged their farms for Wake Forest College. Their names should be written in the hearts of the people: Thompson, Purefoy, Wait and Justice.—Wright.

Flattery and compliments ought not to be the extent of our interest in the women of our State. I rejoice at the revival of an interest which means her better intellectual training and her higher moral culture.—Dr. J. W. Carter.

We gather the following facts from the report on Baptist Female University: A lot has been purchased and paid for at a cost of ——; a $38,000 contract for a building has been made, on which $6,000 has been paid, the first story having been raised and work now going on upon the second. A resolution has been passed by the trustees not to endanger the property with debt; so money must be constantly coming in, if the work is to go on. The Secretary has notes and subscriptions to the amount of $15,000.

Speaking of the unanimous adoption of the plans of co operation, Dr. Morehouse of New York said, "It is an event of a life time, a conjunction of the planets." Prest. Crosby, of the Colored A. and M. College: "All this race question is being settled; our best friend is our next door neighbor." President Taylor: "I hail the day gladly." Prof. J. W. Gore: "I am glad I have lived to see this day." Rev. W. R Gwaltney: "I never saw a Convention more unanimous for a plan." Dr. Skinner: "It is a leading of Providence."

Never in the history of the Convention was a more affecting service held than the memorial service Sunday night in memory of S. W. Eaton, Jordan Tysor, F. B Parks, Ezra Tatum, W. G. Forebee, S. N Buxton, J. T. Weff, W. H. Manning, J. W Register, C. T Bailey J L. Carroll, G. W. Hill, W. G. Upchurch, G. W. Blount, Mrs. W. W. Vass, T. Harrison, and C. Durham. Few could refrain from weeping; and all went away closer to God for having reviewed the lives of these good and true servants of the Lord, who were faithful unto death. The following brethren made remarks, and many more would have followed but for the lateness of the hour: J. D. Hufham, T. E Skinner, T. H. Pritchard, H. A. Brown, J. C. Scarborough, G. M. Webb, J. H. Vernon, T. J. Taylor, J. G. Pulliam, R M. Hawkins, J. C. Caddell, L. Johnson.

The plans of co operation of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, our Home Board, the Negro Baptist State Convention and the white Baptist State Convention, as adopted at Greensboro, provide that the four bodies share the expense as follows: For the first year, one-third by each organization; the second year, two fifths by the State Convention, (colored), and the other three fifths equally by the other bodies; third year, one half by the Convention, and the other half equally by the other bodies. A general missionary at a salary of not more than $1 000 and $250 for expenses, and not to exceed four district missionaries, each to receive not more than $600 with $100 for expenses, are provided for. Rev. C. S. Brown of Winton, N. C., has been elected general missionary, brethren Vincent of Raleigh, N.C., Maloy of Wilmington, N.C., and Whitted of Warrenton, N. C., district missionaries, (all colored) Accordingly, the expense this year will be $3,800 (or $4 000, if another missionary is chosen.) Of this $3,800 our Convention and our Home Board are obligated to raise $1,100 this year; next year, $990; the next year, $825. Secretary Morehouse gave the amounts as $900 $844 and $760 respectively; but we have figured it out otherwise. We have reckoned in this matter that the parts apportioned to our Home Board and our State Convention will be practically the burden of our State Convention, that is our State Board. Plans like these have been adopted in Alabama and South Carolina. It is worthy of note that the plans adopted apply to work among the negroes throughout the entire State. They were not submitted to the Western Convention, but will be probably.

Heard at the Y. P. Meeting.

Why not call it sometimes a praise meeting instead of a prayer meeting?—Brown.

The New Sunday-school Committee.

The following is the report of committees which had in advisement the matter of dividing the State Mission Board of State Missions and Sunday schools:

The committees on Sunday-schools, Colportage and Bible work; and on the necessary changes in the constitution of the Convention so as to permit a separate Board for Sunday school and Colportage work, to whom the various reports of these committees were recommitted for the purpose of of agreeing on one report to be made this evening, beg leave to submit the following report:

1. That a committee of fifteen members of the Board of Missions and Sunday schools, be and are hereby appointed to whom shall be entrusted the Sunday school and Colportage work conducted by the Convention. The committee to be selected by the convention annually.

Second; That it shall be the duty of the committee to manage the Sunday-school supply store now conducted by the Board of Missions and Sunday schools at Raleigh, and to them shall also be committed the appointment of a Sunday school Secretary or Secretaries to prosecute the Sunday school work in the bounds of the Convention, and we recommend that our Sunday schools be urged to purchase their supplies from our supply store

Third; That the committee is also requested to provide for establishing Sunday-schools, and increasing the efficiency of existing Sunday schools, for holding Sunday-school Institutes in the different associations of the Convention and to organize the Baptist Sunday-school workers of the State.

Fourth; The committee is directed to report to the Board of Missions and Sunday-schools and through them to the Baptist State Convention annually.

Signed, S. F. Conrad, Carey J. Hunter, John C. Scarborough, A. M. Simms, Thos. Hume and J. B. Boone.

The committee is composed as follows:

N. B. Broughton, chairman, A. M. Simms, W. N. Jones, T. H. Briggs, S W. Brewer, J. W. Gore, W. L Poteat, J. C. Scarborough, Jno. T. Pullen, J. W. Bailey, J. H. Weathers, J. W. Carter, J. B. Brewer, W. R. Gwaltney, J. S. Hardaway.

The following is the committee (with the Association of each) which unanimously nominated our new Secretary.

One of the brightest speeches that this occasion called out was from the youthful Rev. J. W. Millard of Henderson. He began with an incident taken from Dr. Jeter's "Recollections of a Long Life." When he had his great audience at white heat under his pleadings for Wake Forest College, he cried out: "What are alumni for, if not to care for their old mother?"—Religious Herald.

On account of delay in completing repairs, the Union Meeting with Shady Grove church will not be held this coming fifth Sunday, but will be put off until first fifth Sunday in 1896.

Rev. J. K. Howell writes that the house of North Rocky Mount church is being ceiled and plastered. Sunday-school numbers 100; Sunbeams 50; church members 38.

Constitution of the Baptist Young People's Union, Auxiliary to the Baptist State Convention of North Carolina.

ARTICLE 1.—Name.—The name of this organization shall be The Baptist Young People's Union, auxiliary to the Baptist State Convention.

ART. 2.—Object.—The object of this organization shall be the alliance of our North Carolina young people in close auxiliary relation to the Baptist State Convention; their growth in knowledge of the Bible doctrine and ethics, of Baptist polity and history, and of missionary principles and enterprises; their development in spiritual life and Christian graces; their training in the best methods of Christian work; and their culture in devout and reverent Christian worship. It shall also be the object of this organization to encourage young people's organizations in the churches, co operating with it to sustain active auxiliary relations to the Boards of the Baptist State Convention. In pursuance of these ends, it shall be the aim of this Union to foster and aid local Baptist young people's organizations in connection with Baptist churches, in harmony with their principles and polity.

ART. 3.—Members.—The members of the Union shall be accredited delegates from the Baptist Young People's Societies under the auspices of the Baptist churches of North Carolina, on the basis of one delegate to every ten members, or major fraction thereof, of each Baptist Young People's Society; provided there be no more than five delegates from any Society. Every Missionary Baptist pastor in North Carolina shall be entitled to membership.

ART. 4.—Officers.—The officers of the Union shall be a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Recording Secretary and a Treasurer, who shall be elected annually by ballot. Each of these officers shall perform the duties usually appertaining to their respective offices, until his successor is chosen.

ART. 5.—Executive Committee.—Sec. 1 There shall be an Executive Committee consisting of the President and Secretary of the Union, and the Secretary of the Board of Missions of the Baptist State Convention, and four members elected by the Union in annual session.

Sec. 2 The Executive Committee may select from its members a Chairman, but its Secretary shall be the Secretary of the Union.

Sec. 3. The Executive Committee shall have two regular meetings, one to be held at the annual meeting of the Union, and the other at not less than three months before the next annual meeting of the Union. Called meetings of the Committee may be held upon the written request of three of its members. Four members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum.

Sec. 4. The Executive Committee shall be empowered to devise such plans, raise such funds, make such appointments, conduct such operations and require such reports as it may deem best for the furtherance of the objects of the Union; and to fill vacancies occurring between meetings of the Union.

Sec. 5. The Executive Committee shall make full reports of its proceedings, and of the work done by and under it, to the Union at its annual meetings, and it shall be subject to the instructions of the Union.

ART. 6. Meetings.—The Union shall hold its regular meetings annually, in connection with and at the place selected for the annual meeting of the Baptist State Convention, or at such other time and place as either the Union or its Executive Committee may appoint. Special meetings of the Union shall be called on the written request of five members of the Executive Committee.

N. B.—By vote of the Union, this Constitution is authoritative until the next meeting, when revision will be made.

We are sorry that it could not be reported that the endowment of the Royall chair, so auspiciously begun by the Charlotte Convention, was not complete at Greensboro. Something like $16,000 has been subscribed. At least $9,000 more must be, as ten per cent. of it must be put into a sinking fund and expenses of canvassing must be paid. Mr. CARY J. HUNTER, Supt. Union Central Life Ins. Co. for Va. & N. C., Raleigh, N. C.

Dear Sir:—On July the 15th, 1895, while in vigorous health, my husband, Rev. Dr. C. Durham, applied for a policy in your Company and received policy No. 132,702 for $1,500. The proofs of his death left Raleigh the night of Nov. 30th, and I am in receipt of a check for $1,500 dated Dec. 3rd.

The loving thoughtfulness of my beloved husband in thus providing for me after his death is most highly appreciated, and is clearly what a faithful husband should do. Dr. Durham had a high opinion of your company, and your immediate payment of the claim and kindness in the matter of business pertaining thereto causes me to most highly recommend your company to those needing insurance.

(Signed,) MRS. C. DURHAM.

Written by Miss Carrie L. MacLean of Charlotte, N. C.; read before the Young People's Meeting at Greensboro, by Rev. Junius W. Millard of Lenoir.

The day is past that held the view of Sir Richard Steele that "woman should be characterized by a tender fear and an inferiority which makes her lovely."

The human mind is itself the greatest proof of the skill of the Infinite mind who created it. It was made to be educated, not only for greater usefulness here, but to prepare it for the endless ages of eternity. For centuries it has not been doubted that man needs an education, but only recently has it been conceded that woman needs it equally as much—even more. Her intellect was bestowed by the same Creator who endowed that of man. It was given for a purpose, and to be educated and exercised.

Christianity has been a mighty power in uplifting the condition of woman, but the work is not yet completed. Woman has had comparatively a small share in the world's progress. It may be true that the old-time training was sufficient to meet the needs of that time, but the present day brings new wants to the home and new duties to the women so that they must need have a better preparation for the manifold duties that are theirs.

Our girls must have a broader education—an education equal to that given their brothers,—not only intellectual training, but education in courage and resolution, in appreciation of the lofty and noble. For years woman has had to fight her way towards equal privileges in educational advantages. She has been neglected and discriminated against. The boys were educated, the girls remained ignorant. This is the situation now, though in a less degree than ever before. Ways are provided for the young men to be educated. In a recent article in the RECORDER, Dr. Kerfoot, of the Seminary, says that any young man who will can get an education. The girls have not been so provided for. Their responsibilities are even graver than those of men, and if they are by nature the weaker, all the more do they need to be prepared and strengthened for the great responsibilities which must inevitably come to them. When will the fathers of this country realize that of the two the girl needs the education much more than the boy, and that the good of society depends much more upon her training than upon his? Mr. Stringfield states the matter briefly: "Give the girls the chance the boys have."

It is true that some few men and still fewer women have attained eminence with no educational advantages, but such instances are rare. Most of us need encouragement to sustain, instruction to aid and directions to guide us; and in the cases of those who have succeeded without education, how much greater would their influences have been had their efforts been directed by intelligence.

Why should our women be educated? Because of the power they may become in lifting up, in social life, because of their mission in the home, because in very many cases they must be self-supporting and need to be independent, and because of their share in the work of evangelizing the world.

Pestalozzi tells us in the story of "Leonard and Gertrude" how a whole community was regenerated by the influence of one godly woman. There are to-day in our own land communities in need of a radical change that cannot be brought about by legislation or endowments, important as these are, but by the devotion and efforts of noble women overflowing from the home into the community.

Our social life is a question in which our women are intensely interested; not social life considered only with reference to that which affords pleasure and pastime for those who have leisure to enjoy them, but in a broader sense. There are many evils in society calling loudly for condemnation and reform, and no one is in a position to work so effectively as woman if she only understands her duty and responsibility. This she cannot do without the higher training of mind and spirit which comes from true education. All know the work to be done by women in temperance reform. She must understand the influence of drink upon the moral and physical life before she will be nerved for the conflict. The influence of educated and refined young women along this line is far more potent than all the temperance societies.

We hear many say that "woman's place is the home." No one disputes this, but a home may be made the worst instead of the best of schools if she who has charge of it is ignorant and incompetent. When this is the case, inexpressible evil is wrought. Woman needs a cultivated intellect as well as a sympathizing heart to perform her duties in the home. She must be educated to be a companion for a cultured husband. Her knowledge and business capacity are not only consistent with true womanliness, but are in some degree essential to the comfort and well-being of home. Habits of business do not refer only to trade, but may apply to all the practical affairs of life,—to anything that has to be organized or provided for, to anything that requires method and accuracy.

It is exceedingly important in this day that every young woman may be able to make her own way in the world, and education opens new avenues of employment and self support. An educated woman will possess the faculty of self help when other resources fail her. Education has been her "ornament in prosperity and refuge in adversity."

Of all this is the relation that woman bears to the evangelization of the world. There is a great field and great work in this direction, a necessary in the most successfully the gospel is a proposition for discussion. [illegible] take in the work is a question of far-reaching importance. They are wanted for the work at home and abroad. They are considered absolutely necessary to the success of the work in some parts of the foreign field. More and more they are coming to be relied upon as teachers in our Sunday schools. We are not stating what ought to be, but what is. In all the departments of church work she is becoming more and more an important factor. If she has a place in Christian work and the evangelization of the world, then she needs the highest heart and brain culture possible.

In North Carolina there are 153,000 white Baptists. It may be fairly inferred that one-fourth of these—38,000—are girls—unmarried young women. How few of these are in or have been in our schools, or in any school—how many are not in school at all, and have no hope of ever being able to go! What a power for good could these thirty-eight thousand young women become if they were educated under Christian influences and with Bible instruction. "Only a girl," and yet what wonderful possibilities lie buried there. A Mrs. Yates or a Fannie Knight may come forth to bless the world in winning souls for the Master, or to be the queen of a home. Many of these girls are bright, earnest and energetic. Their lives are passing, and with them the opportunities for enlarged usefulness. They are doing the best they can, but have no opportunity of preparing for the responsibilities they will be called upon to meet. It is to be hoped that this rising tide of interest in and for the young people will eventuate in giving to the young women of our churches higher conceptions of their work, and also a more thorough preparation for that work.

This assembly is only a small part of the great host banded together in North Carolina for a mighty work. Surely a band of young people could find no more profitable or interesting work than making it possible for those who desire an education to obtain it. What nobler work could the young people's societies have than to help in establishing a school from which for all time will emanate influences for good—an imperishable monument to their zeal and devotion to the cause of the Master! Interest a number of the young people in our University, and they will inspire one another and their enthusiasm will grow and spread until, like a blaze kindled from a wandering spark, it will glow and enlarge until it lights up the whole community with its generous flame. Let us awaken to our responsibility, and resolve that we will have a share in this great work. Let us hasten, for to many who would gladly embrace them the opportunities are rapidly slipping away. Interest the young people, and the early success of our University is assured.

"This Sect"—Baptists.

BY REV. W. R. HARRELL.

In his thrilling little pamphlet on "Religious Liberty and the Baptists," Rev. Dr. C. C. Bitting, has this, among many other good things, to say, concerning the people, called in the New Testament, "this sect," and who are specially mentioned in Acts 28: 22, as "everywhere spoken against."

"They are," says he, "a sort of Chamomile people, who thrive better under some battering; and they grew very rapidly and spread widely" under persecution, in the beginning, and in all lands; and in process of time, in Colonial days in Virginia (in 1608), while the State preachers (Episcopalians) "were many of them utterly godless men," caring only for the 'fleece' and not "the flock", but having the law of the Colony on their side, they drove out "this sect," the Baptists, and, wherever they were caught, imprisoned their preachers in the jails of the towns.

But these men, though behind the bars, "preached through the jail-windows," and, when released, they still preached "in the forests, at private houses, anywhere, and thousands were converted and baptized" (immersed) by them into the fellowship of "this sect," so hated and despised by the "society people" of the State in that day.

Dr. Bitting continues: "When they preached from the jails, fences were built up against the windows" from the outside by their enemies, "drums were beaten to drown the voices of the preachers; and devices of various kinds," instigated by the Episcopal clergy," "were employed to check the earnest and imprisoned Baptists; but they still preached Christ to the perishing crowd without," for the Word of God cannot be bound, nor jailed, nor crushed.

"Illiterate and rustic these men may have been, and often were"; poor, helpless, and friendless, in the power of their foes and the State religion they were indeed, but like their great progenitors in sufferings (the first New Testament Baptists) the fishermen of Galilee who followed Jesus, they were fired with a holy zeal and an unconquerable faith, "and being taught of God, they rejected all books but the Bible as guides, and gathered souls for Christ, while the shameful dissoluteness of "many of the 'State clergy' was ruining them" on every hand.

"No more than Jewish sneers" at the "Carpenter's Son," restrained the first disciples in Judea, did the reproaches and trials of these humble Christians restrain or influence them," being "self sacrificing, pious, laborious and devoted Baptists," for they grew and spread and finally overcame "and overturned the power that trampled them under foot, winning at last, that greatest of all boons, "liberty of conscience on this soil for themselves and for every creed." Glory to God!

This was in Virginia; but its blessings reached far and wide; and to day, through the efforts of these Baptists in these United States of America, all denominations can sit peacefully under the tree planted in the sufferings and blood of "this sect," who, through the Spirit of Christ, their blessed Master, still abides on the earth "to contend, as no others can or will, "for the precious faith" of the gospel, the faith once, for all time, "delivered to the saints."

Again, we say, glory to God! And let every Baptist preacher, and every Baptist deacon, and all the "sacramental hosts of God's elect," say Amen and Amen! For unto "this sect," is due, under God to day, the religious freedom of all people over whom wave in protective splendor, the "Stars and Stripes" of "The land of the free and the home of the brave." Baptists did it.

"If any people on earth have an honorable history, surely Baptists have, and," to quote Dr. Bitting again, "they have never been persecutors for conscience' sake. They have never resorted to the lash, or to prisons, or to banishment, or worse, to silence what they could not conquer by arguments," as their enemies have done to them; but loving truth most of all, "this sect" has ever followed whithersoever it leads, and God being their helper, it will ever follow that light, until the time come, when all who love Christ shall be ready to rejoice in the "unity of the faith," and to hold the grand and glorious doctrine of "one Lord, one faith and one baptism" throughout the entire realm of Christianity. For it is of "this sect," of whom the Apostle, doubtless, speaks when he says, in Eph. 3: 15, "Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named."

"Spoken against," of course, "everywhere." Oft "persecuted, but not forsaken." "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God, the Father," they will tarry, yes, "this sect" will tarry till the coming of their Lord; and thus, ever more, be with him in glory. So be it. Amen.

The Dead Line.

The dead line is never passed by a live man. The pastor of the largest Methodist church in New York City has passed threescore years and ten. Dr. Lovick Pierce, of Georgia, was a city pastor after he was eighty five, and preached like an Apollos when in the nineties. He kept enough summer in his heart to hinder winter from creeping into his veins. The man who, at fifty, preaches the sermon he made at twenty five, has one foot, if not both, over the "dead line." He gets and gives no benefit of his mental growth. He who does not fertilize his mind with current literature will soon become barren. A man cannot grow mentally great upon his own stock of information and reflection. A battery with one pole is inert. Memory will not fail with age if it is persistently exercised. The power of abstraction increases with one's years, if the habit of mental concentration is cultivated. If statesmen and lawyers are at their best when octogenarians, why should not preachers be? A man who has lived eighty years has had great opportunities for knowledge. They should be storehouses for the famished. The "barrel" is the bane of preachers. If the dead "heads" it contains could be buried, the live brain would make itself felt. The second time a man preaches a sermon it should be "a new edition, revised and improved." Do not give veal for beef. "We live in deeds, not years." Why not, by molding old plumage, like the eagle, renew thy youth and mount up as upon wings? Soar sunward and "they that look out of the windows" will not be prematurely "darkened." Cut new teeth, and "the sound of the grinders" will not be low. Carry weight and "the grasshopper" will not be "a burden."—Ram's Horn.

Bro. Editor:—I wish to announce through the RECORDER that I am getting up an "Historical Account" of the Eastern Association from 1833 to 1895. In this account I purpose to give the date, place, names of moderators, clerks and ministers who preached at each session, number of members, sums contributed, when churches were organized (as far as I have the information), when the churches joined the Association, names of ordained ministers and of those who did missionary work at home and abroad, and many other interesting facts.

I have all the minutes from 1842 to 1895 inclusive, except the copy for 1878, when the Association was held at Shiloh (now Pender county). I would like also to get the copies of the minutes of the old "Goshen Association" for 1833, 1835, 1837, 1839, and 1841.

Any one furnishing me with any or all of the above named minutes will be rewarded for so doing. I have been interested in this matter for sometime, and intend to finish up the work as soon as possible. If any one can furnish me with any or all of the above named copies, please send the same by registered mail to me at Ingold, Sampson county, N. C. OLIVER BLACKBURN.

The Fifth Annual Meeting.

As the ladies from some forty churches gathered in the Market Street Methodist church, Friday morning, Dec. 6th, for the opening session of the Fifth Annual Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Societies, it was noticeable that they were mostly strangers to one another, few of them having attended previous Annual Meetings. A common interest is, however, a common introduction, and the stiff formality said often to prevail in woman's meetings was noticeably lacking throughout the three sessions of the Meeting. The ladies fell into eager groups telling of plans tried, successes, failures, hopes and ambitions for larger work at each adjournment; left slowly and lingeringly, and finally parted for their homes, only when everybody knew everybody. The Greensboro ladies had thought of those hundred and one things that add to the success of any meeting; they were the entertainers, the ushers, the musicians, and friends and counsellors at every turn.

The first session was opened by devotional exercises conducted by Mrs. Livingston Johnson of Greensboro.

Mrs. C. C. Holton of Greensboro welcomed the ladies to Greensboro, dwelling not only on the pleasure their presence would give, but on the benefit she believed this meeting would be to the home society. Those who had been interested before would now be ardent.

Mrs. T. H. Briggs of Raleigh responded to this address, thanking the Greensboro ladies for its cordiality and emphasizing the binding ties of Christian love. A child once said, "I love you, mother dear, as high as the sky." So our love for one another was as high as the sky, for our mutual love was bound up in love for Christ.

Mrs. Lizzie Battle of Durham presided during the election of officers for the Annual Meeting. This election resulted in the election of Miss Fannie E. S. Heck, President; Mrs. Pruett, Charlotte, Secretary; Mrs. C. E. Holton, Greensboro, Treasurer.

Miss Heck's report as President of the Central Committee called upon all to join with her in returning thanks for the many blessings which had come to the world, the church, and to each individual worker through the work of missions. She sought, she said, to strike the key note of the whole meeting, and to make that note praise. Paul enjoined thanksgiving, adding, "and the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep your minds, through Jesus Christ. Praise and peace go hand in hand. A remembrance of past mercies is a strengthening of faith for future blessings. In rapid review she glanced at great causes for thanks in foreign fields—7,000 missionaries, 30,000 native helpers, one million converts, the Bible translated into 365 tongues and dialects. She thanked God for what the churches at home had already done, but most of all that this was but an earnest of what they yet would do, and do speedily. For the Woman's Missionary Union she would return thanks, for through its agency, in the eight years of its existence, three hundred and twenty-two thousand dollars had been given into the Lord's treasury for home and foreign missions. Coming more especially to the work of the Baptist women of North Carolina she thankfully remembered the measure of success that had been granted them—the blessings of larger service, enlarged minds, larger and broader interests, closer Christian friendships, the subsidence of obstacles, and most of all, for the blessed assurance of the loyal fellowship of co-workers with God.

Turning from this brief summary of countless blessings, she spoke more particularly of the features of the work of the year just closed. Last year in Charlotte the words discouragement and retrograde had first found utterance in the entire work of the Central Committee. They should certainly find no place here. Encouragement, progress and advance might be written through and through all the year's work. From the first of the year there had been marked increase over the quarterly reports of last year. The Christmas Offering of 1895, the first work following the annual meeting, showed a firmer hold on the work by many of the Societies.

The returns of the Week of Self-denial to relieve the debt of the Home Board had been, she was sure, inadequately reported, from want of care in designating objects for which sums were sent, but from this week dated a remarkable growth of interest in that feature of the work which those who knew it best delighted to call "the blessed work of box packing." Last year the value of boxes reported had been only $167 80. This year boxes had been sent to the value of $1,338 19. Over these had gone up songs of praise, and coming back from those who received their benefits a thousand prayers had called down blessings on those who had thus ministered to the necessity of the saints. There seemed danger that the Societies would forget that the work was threefold, and that State Missions, to which they had contributed by far too small an amount, stood equal with Home and Foreign Missions. Organize a church in North Carolina and you open a fountain whose healing streams will soon flow to all nations.

They met under the shadow of a great loss to State Missions in the death of Dr. C. Durham. She rejoiced that so noble a life had been given to so noble a work.

Having spoken of Foreign, Home and State Missions, she would speak of what might be called Household Missions—the work among the colored women in and around our home. Sunday-school teacher's classes, mother's meetings, prayer-meetings and Bible classes were being conducted among them by our Southern Baptist women, but these should be multiplied many fold. This was a field for which each was a qualified worker.

A most hopeful feature of the last year's work had been the holding of Associational Missionary Meetings at nine of the Associations. These meetings had been held largely through the aid of the Associational Vice Presidents, whose valuable services had added much to the success of the year. There was great need that the number of these Vice Presidents be increased, by far the larger number of the Associations being without them.

The office required work, prayer, patience, tact, gentleness and perseverance. She pleaded for volunteers from those who were willing to offer those gifts to the Lord.

Turning from the special features of last year, she begged that every Society would in some way observe in the opening of the new year, not only the Christmas offering for China, but the Week of Prayer coupled with it. Many had observed this week with great uplift of spirit, but not all.

Leaving the Corresponding Secretary to report the moneyed contributions, she gave the statistics of that part of the work that devolved upon the President of the Committee: Letters written, 1,352; sent out quarterly letters, 1,030; leaflets, 5,441; blanks for reports, etc., 1,600; Christmas programs, 600; Christmas envelopes, 3,000; "Missionary Talks," 3,600.

But one feature of the year remained to be touched upon, that feature around which so much of interest clustered—the Yates Memorial. Proposed and planned in Charlotte, the Central Committee had hoped and labored that this Memorial of $1,000 extra to place a new missionary in China as a living Memorial to Dr. and Mrs. Yates might be a completed success by this meeting. This, she said with much regret, was not the case. Let no one, however, call it a failure. The Memorial would, she felt confident, be a success and that speedily. Those who had striven for it would strive more, those who had overlooked it would do so no longer.

Finally she would close, as she began by giving thanks. While others were striving for the new, we should be thankful for the old faith, old hope, old work. She had no new plans. She commended the old faith that had strengthened for the past labors and the old love that had made that labor light. Might God who had of old been their guard and guide, be in and over all through the coming year.

The afternoon session was opened by devotional exercises conducted by Mrs. Battle of Durham.

Rev. E. Y. Mullins, Assistant Corresponding Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board was introduced. He congratulated the ladies as a part of the Woman's Missionary Union of the Southern Baptist Convention, on the great things accomplished by that organization in its brief history. Organized in 1888 its first year's contribution to Home and Foreign Missions was twenty one thousand dollars. Last year its contributions were nearly fifty thousand dollars.

The Board, he said, was receiving less this year than last because the times were better. In good times men invested more for themselves and had less for God.

Mrs. Meserve, of Raleigh, spoke of the Indians. She had spent several years in a Government school where some forty tribes were represented among the pupils. Every people wished to be judged by their race. She gave instances of the success of members of various Indian tribes. What these had done others might do. In school the Indians succeeded best in those branches which were partly imitative such as writing and drawing. She called attention to a picture of a young Indian chief and his father. The father was a "blanket Indian" in all the war paint and feathers of his chieftainship, the young man with bright, intelligent face was dressed in citizen's clothes. These two were the types of what the Indian was and what he might become and was rapidly becoming.

Mrs. Hatcher of Siler City read a letter of greeting from Mrs. Britton of China. She expressed her regret at not being able to be with the meeting. She spoke of the Yates Memorial as an accomplished fact, and hoped a young lady missionary would soon be sent out.

Mrs. Chappell of China, though present, was unable, through recent sickness, to do more than rise and express her pleasure in looking into the faces of so many of her sisters.

Mr. Britton took for the thought of his address the farewell words of the missionaries in China. The message he was to bear to the brethren at home was, "Pray ye, therefore, the lord of the harvest that he send laborers into his vineyard." Laborers were asking to be sent but could not go.

Mr. Chappell gave a series of contrasts taking his hearers with him in imagination to a number of Chinese homes, setting over against one another, the Chinese Christian home and the Chinese heathen home.

After the adjournment, an informal reception was tendered the missionaries, and the ladies enjoyed greatly inspecting the missionary curios displayed.

The third session of the meeting was opened by a responsive Bible reading. The fact that the Yates Memorial had not been completed, as had been hoped, lent an added thoughtfulness to the meeting, and the thoughts and desires of all were centered around the decision that must be made with regard to it during the morning.

Miss Liddell of Charlotte read the annual report of Mrs. J. A. Briggs, Cor. Sec. of the Central Committee. Mrs. Briggs congratulated the Societies whose work it was her duty to formulate into one gratifying whole. But a small part of the amount here recorded had come from plethoric purses. The faithful giving of littles had made the report what it was, the best ever made by the Central Committee, with the exception of that made in the Centennial year—the total contributions of the year being $4,491 88.

Though only a limited number had taken part in the Christmas Offering, it amounted to $320 84. The Yates Memorial Fund up to the time of closing her report had only reached $352 71. The general divisions of the work were as follows:—

Foreign Missions, $1,091.66; Christmas Offering, $320 84; Memorial Fund, $352 71. Total Foreign Missions, $1,765 21. Home Missions, $736.20; Value boxes to missionaries, $1,338 19; Week of Self-Denial, $159 83. Total for Home Missions, $2,234.22. State Missions, $402 05; Ministerial Education, $37.96; Orphanage, $46 02; Expense Fund, $6.42. Total, $4,491 88.

Following the adoption of this report the question of what should be done in the matter of the Memorial was thrown open for discussion. Miss Heck stated that since the close of the report funds had been reported for the Memorial sufficient to make the amount in hand $379 00. After a free discussion in which Mrs. Briggs, Mrs. Carter, Mrs. Brown, Miss Liddell, Miss Sheets and others took part it was decided to endeavor to complete the Memorial by the first of April.

Reports from the societies were read by their respective representatives and while it is impossible to give these reports or any mention of them here, it may be said that they were more than ordinarily helpful. They gave in a few words the year's work of each and by what means that work had been accomplished.

This was appropriately followed by a Conference on Society Methods, a number of ladies giving what to them seemed the most helpful feature of the year's work. One said the packing of a box; another the week of prayer, another the spirit of unity prevailing in the work, another the interest of the children in missions until a many sided and most helpful view had been presented.

Miss Applewhite of Carthage read a paper by Mrs. Laura Jones of Henderson, answering the query, Should we have Young Woman's Missionary Societies? Mrs. Jones said the query implied a doubt. In her mind there was no doubt of the need of such Societies.

Miss Zoe Riggsbee of Durham followed with a number of practical suggestions drawn from her own experience.

Miss Draughan of Kinston presented the report for the committee on Plans of Work. While recommending the usual features of the work, the committee laid special stress on the observance of the week of prayer and the training of the children not only in missions but in doctrinal truth. This latter recommendation was somewhat novel in this meeting but met the approval of all, especially when it was coupled with the recommendation to instruct the children in the Broadus catechism.

Miss Sheets presented the report of the committee on Resolutions, and gracefully thanked the many who had contributed so much to the pleasure of the Fifth Annual Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Societies.

After prayer, the doxology was sung, and with general expression of thankfulness for the good year's work closed and hope for the year's work begun, the Meeting adjourned to meet at the same time and place as the Baptist State Convention of 1896.

Southern Union Eastern Association.

Place and time—Long Creek church, Pender county, Friday before the fifth Sunday in December, 1895. Introductory sermon by Rev. S. D. Swaim.

The following are the subjects for discussion:

1. The Bible—how to study it. Speakers—Rev. S. D. Swaim and Bro. W. W. Larkins.
2. What is it to be a Christian? Speakers—Rev. W. B. Oliver and Bro. H. A. Bland.
3. What do we owe our children? Speakers—Rev. M. C. Walton and Bro. J. S. Cannady.
4. Am I my brother's keeper? Revs. F. T. Wooten and N. A. Shelly.

SECRETARY.

Spend all the time you can spare in studying some part of the Bible. Ponder it over and over, verse by verse, word by word. Think carefully over the whole reading, and get at its meaning. You can get more benefit from the prayerful study of one chapter than from a dozen chapters hurriedly read.

will find it to their advantage to get the Minutes of their Association printed by us.

We have been doing this class of work for more than twenty years, and are familiar with the proper arrangement, and with the names of the brethren, &c., and when we print them the work is not only well done, but the Minutes are correct.

It would be better for all the work if the Minutes of all the Associations were printed at one place.

Clerks will do well to send us their Minutes.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

WHEREAS, Our beloved pastor, Rev. W. P. Jordan, has been faithfully exercising the pastoral care over our church for the last ten years, and that under his efficient ministrations our church has grown numerically, and also spiritually, and that a deeper interest in missions and charitable objects has been worked under his wise leadership. Therefore,

Resolved 1. That inasmuch as he has seen fit to sever his connection with us as pastor, after having been called in conference by a good majority to serve us longer, we believe that he had no selfish motive in rejecting our call, but under existing circumstances he felt from the depth of his heart it would be best for the church to call some one else as pastor.

2. That we tender to him our sincere thanks for his earnest and impartial labors among us during his long pastorate.

3. That we can conscientiously commend him to any Baptist church needing a pastor as one who walketh uprightly before his flock, and as one who is specially gifted as a church financier, and also a preacher of no ordinary ability, possessing the true qualifications requisite for a good country pastor.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our church records, and a copy be sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER for publication.

Portraits

recognized by all as the most talented Portrait Painter in the South. If you wish fine work, purely hand-made, by one of America's most gifted artists, write him for prices, which are within the reach of all.

Mr. Corwin is strictly reliable, being well known all over the South.

A Remarkable Offer.

TWO QUARTERS FOR THE PRICE OF ONE.

The American Baptist Publication Society will put its periodicals to any school, not now taking them, at an introductory price of one-half the regular rates. That is to say, if any such school will send us the full price for the quarter ending March 31, 1896, we will continue the subscription without further pay until June 30, 1896.

We desire also to call attention to the reduction in price of the Advanced Quarterly and Bible Lessons, and to the fact that, beginning with January, The Baptist Teacher will have a Missionary Department. Miss Mary E. Wright, of Georgia, will report for the Southern Baptist Convention, Rev. F. S. Dobbins, for the Missionary Union, and Rev. J. W. Weddell, for the Home Mission Society. A view will thus be given of all Baptist missions, Home and Foreign, North and South.

Send orders early to nearest branch house or Philadelphia.

A genuine ghost story has yet to be attested; but not so a genuine blood purifier. Over and over again it has been proved that Ayer's Sarsaparilla stands alone among medicines as the most reliable tonic alterative in pharmacy. It stood alone at the World's Fair.

The exhibit of the Seaboard Air Line at the Atlanta Exposition is one of the most ingenious, attractive and creditable features of the exposition. It was designed and arranged by a North Carolinian, which accounts for the keen appreciation of our State's worth which is so evident. We are indebted to our friend and brother, General Passenger Agent, T. J. Anderson, for two souvenir pamphlets, one descriptive of the S. A. L. exhibit, the other outlining a beautiful route from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

DIED.

SWEORENGAIN—At his home in Concord on Dec. 5th, 1895, of pneumonia, William Sweorengain passed away at the age of fifty-nine years. He was a member of the Baptist church in Concord, and leaves a wife and several children to sorrow over their loss. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

PASTOR.

MORGAN—Daniel W. Morgan departed this life in the fifty-eighth year of his age, at Elizabeth City, N. C., Nov. 29th, 1895. He leaves a loving wife and several grown children to mourn their loss. For many weeks Bro. Morgan had been a great sufferer, but bore it all with Christian fortitude. He has been for many years a faithful member of the Baptist church. He related to the writer some days before his death his experience when converted, while yet a youth. There was no doubt of the work of grace in his heart. He loved to talk about his soul. He was prepared, and therefore willing to go. May the Lord bless all who knew him to love him, that they may be as well prepared to go and meet him. May the love of the Lord console those of his own household.

C. S. B.

WEBB—"How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out." On Thursday morning, Nov. 7th, 1895, God sent his angel to beat the spirit of Monnie Webb to the better land. After three weeks of suffering, at times most intense, the imprisoned soul broke the bonds of flesh and the loving hearts of mother, sisters, and friends, were left in lonely grief.

In the dark hours of pain and sorrow we can but wonder why heaven should covet earth's fairest treasures; yet we know 'tis right that God should have the best.

Monnie's life was short, her mission soon filled; yet sweet memories of her pure life still linger in our thoughts and make us long to be nobler and better, that we, too, sometime may hear the blessed words, "Well done."

Fond mother, remember not that one less tie binds you to earth but rather that you have one more angel in heaven. Trust the loving Father; he can bind the wound and heal the broken heart.

"God's ways are always right,
And love is o'er them all,
Though far above our sight."

A Request from Rev. A. D. Hunter.

TO THE PASTORS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY-SCHOOLS AND MISSION SOCIETIES OF THE RALEIGH BAPTIST ASSOCIATION.

Brethren:—I was appointed Vice-President of the Foreign Mission Board for the Raleigh Association at its last meeting. I wish to get at once in correspondence with each pastor, church, Sunday-school and mission society.

Let me have the name of the president and secretary of each mission society, and the post-office of each.

Pastors, please write me what plan you will adopt for raising your mission money. I suggest putting the whole mission collections on the weekly basis, paying monthly or quarterly. The monthly basis for church expenses will greatly aid.

Let me suggest that each church arrange to pay expenses of its Sunday-school, and that on each Sunday the school make a collection for our mission, educational or Orphanage work. Let the object of the collection be named one week before it is to be taken and some facts given by the superintendent at the time it is taken. In this way our children can be trained in the objects of our Convention, and not simply to take care of themselves all the time.

Let all churches adopt some good plan and push it. Only one half our churches last year gave to Foreign Missions.

A. D. HUNTER.

Sale of Land.

By virtue of authority given me in a certain Deed of Trust by the Trustees of Bethlehem Church, and at the request of the representatives of said Church, I will on Monday, the 20th day of January, 1896, expose to public sale for cash at the Court-House door in Raleigh, N. C., the property conveyed by said deed, and described as follows: Lying in Wake county, adjoining the lands of J. D. Powell on the south, and W. A. Slater on the other three sides, being the church building and the lot of land on which it is situated. Said Deed of Trust is duly recorded in the office of Register of Deeds for Wake county, in Book 118, page 66). N. B BROUGHTON, Trustee.

There is no place like home —when Pearline is used in it. There is no place about home where Pearline can't be used. Pearline takes the hard work and drudgery out of—keeping a home clean. It is next to having the washing and cleaning done for you, and well done at that. It washes everything that can be washed. It cleans paint, marble, carpets, hangings—in fact everything cleanable. It is a luxury in the bath. It is emphatically without harm to person or things. With Pearline you have rest; it rests with you to have Pearline.

Your Home is probably invaded by peddlers, who claim the stuff they offer is Pearline, "the same as" Pearline, or "as good as" Pearline. IT'S FALSE—Pearline has no equal, and is never peddled. 326 JAMES PYLE, New York.

At Eventide.

Ofttimes, when all the storm-vexed day
The sullen clouds have ceaseless passed,
And winds have wailed as if to pray
For peace at last;
Lo! as if rolled by hand of might,
Aside the gloom of cloud is pressed,
And the soft eve is full of light,
And quiet rest.

Thus, too, beyond our doubt and strife,
Which, cloudlike hide the heavenly light,
Shadowing the fair noon of life
With sombre night,
Awaits a calm and peaceful eve.
Then sorrow shall be overpast;
Then fear shall cease, and struggles leave
God's peace at last.

—Selected.

If no kindly thought or word
We can give, some soul to bless;
If our hands, from hour to hour,
Do no deeds of gentleness:
If to lone and weary ones
We no comfort will impart—
Tho' 'tis summer in the sky,
Yet 'tis winter in the heart!

If we strive to lift the gloom
From a dark and burdened life;
If we seek to lull the storm
Of our fallen brother's strife;
If we bid all hate and scorn
From the spirit to depart—
Tho' 'tis winter in the sky,
Yet 'tis summer in the heart!

Passing Along the Christmas Joy.

Alice Foster was the teacher of a large class of boys in the Sunday-school of Lyndon Avenue church. All were the sons of rich men, save one, Jamie Allen. Poor Jamie! He was the only son of a widow, and six months before, an accident had crippled him for life.

Bright and sunny, he had been a favorite with them all. In school he led his classes, but out of hours he was ever on the alert to earn something to help his mother, whose slender income did not suffice for all their needs. Now he was only a burden, as he sorrowfully thought.

But Jamie was wonderfully ingenious, and as he gained strength, carved really beautiful things with his jackknife. Miss Alice discovered his marvellous gift.

The problem of his future had perplexed her greatly. Dependence was galling to his manly spirit, and he must, in a future not very far away, earn his own living, or partake of charity.

A thought came to her like an inspiration. Her boys more favored than Jamie, could easily contribute enough to give him a course at the Manual Training School in the city. He could now get around nicely on crutches, and the school was near his home. With the aid of the instruction, his natural talent might enable him to provide well for himself and his mother.

One day, when she was paying him a visit, he had confided to her his longing for this very thing. Not that he had any expectation that it would ever be within his reach, but he wanted it, just as a baby cries for the moon.

She laid the matter before the boys, and they grew enthusiastic. She was glad to give them something to think of outside of themselves, and proposed that they should make it really their gift by saving it out of their spending money. The managers of the school offered to give him any special course he might choose for twenty five dollars. She would give five of this herself, leaving a dollar apiece for the twenty boys.

Everything was progressing smoothly, when two weeks before Christmas, as she was in the church aiding the preparations for the the annual festival, she met Mrs. Marvel, a rich, purse proud woman, two of whose boys were in Miss Alice's class.

"I want to know about this scheme of yours," she said. "As I understand it, I don't approve."

So the teacher patiently explained the plan.

"It won't do," continued Mrs. Marvel, "to help such folks too much. If Mrs. Allen cannot afford to send her son to the Training School, let him learn a trade in some other way. Once help them, and you may do it to the end of the chapter."

Miss Alice was aroused. "Is that the spirit of Christ Mrs. Marvel? 'Bear ye one another's burdens.'"

Mrs. Marvel's children were beside her, listening eagerly. "Let us cultivate the true Christian spirit," added the teacher. "'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'"

"I saved my dollar," said Eddie Marvel. The younger boy said nothing, but the poison of selfishness had evidently touched his generous impulse.

"Oh, well, my boys shall give if the rest do," responded Mrs. Marvel, tossing her head. "We shall see what comes of it. My experience has been that you spoil by continually helping."

Christmas night with its festivities rolled around. Jamie Allen's surprise and joy amply repaid the boys for their little self-sacrifice. In passing along the Christmas joy, a three-fold measure returned into their own souls. In after years, Jamie was enabled to live in happy independence, a worker of rare and beautiful woods.—Sophie Bronson Tillerington, in Young Reaper.

Misrepresentation.

One Christmas some one sent Mr. Whittier a gentian flower pressed between two panes of glass. Seen from one side, it appeared only a blurred mass of something without beauty; but seen from the other side, the exquisite beauty of the flower appeared in all its delicate loveliness. Whether the gift was lovely or not to the view depended on the side from which one looked at it. The poet hung the gift on the window pane, putting the blurred side out and the lovely flower side toward his room. Those who passed by without, looking up, marked only a "gray disk of clouded glass," seeing no beauty, but the poet, sitting within, looked at the token and saw outlined against the winter sky all the exquisite loveliness of the flower.

They cannot from their outlook see
The perfect grace it hath for me;
For there the flower, whose fringes through
The frosty breath of autumn blew,
Turns from without its face of bloom
To the warm tropic of my room,
As fair as when beside its brook
The hue of bending skies it took.

But deeper meanings come to me,
My half immortal flower, from thee:
Man judges from a partial view,
None ever yet has brother knew;
The Eternal Eye that sees the whole
May better read the darkened soul,
And find to outward sense denied,
The flower upon its inmost side.

Too often we look upon the blurred side of actions—yes, of people too. We do not see the loveliness that there is on the other side. We are all continually misinterpreting others. There is a flower side in many acts which we condemn because we see only the blurred side. Let us train ourselves to believe the best always of people and of actions, and find some beauty in everything. —Selected.

Christmas Time.

Christmas is at hand. In a few days the happy day will be here. Millions of people, young and old, are engaged in making preparations for it. Millions are impatiently waiting for it to come. The tide of joyful expectancy rises every hour to a greater height, and swells in every increasing volume. It is a time of busy thoughtfulness and loving planning and bright anticipation for countless homes and hearts.

Let us not forget in these preparatory weeks, the many who will have little or no share in the Christmas joy unless we give it to them. In every community there are some, and in our great cities a great host, who look forward to the Christmas season with little gladness. The bright and happy time only makes their own poverty or loneliness harder to bear. Those who have lost their children, think gloomily of the last Christmas when their dear ones were still with them, and mourn over their desolated homes. Those who are too poor to provide Christmas gifts for their loved ones are apt to give way to discouragement. It should be our mission to look out and help all such lonely and discouraged souls. What a work we may do, if we will, in bringing good cheer to these sad homes and hearts! If we have the spirit of him whose birth we celebrate, we will, in these preparatory weeks, think of others than ourselves or those immediately connected with us, and do everything in our power to give those who need it most a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.—Our Young People.

God's Christmas Gift.

Can you conceive of God?

Can you form an idea of a Spirit invisible, eternal, almighty, omnipresent, holy, just and infinitely wise and good?

No! You can form no idea of such a being. But you can form a clear idea of Jesus Christ, as a man, full of love, compassion and sympathy. You can comprehend such a being living, dying, rising again, and dwelling forever in heaven, where he intercedes for those who love and trust in him, obtaining salvation for them, through the merits of his death, and obedience.

Well, he is your Saviour! Immanuel—God-man—God in humanity with us. He was God's Christmas Gift to the world! Him you can take for your Saviour and in Him can you trust! Him you can recognize as the Messiah, the Prince of Peace, the Mediator and Redeemer! Do so; and eternal life and happiness shall be yours. Believe on him, trust in him, as your Saviour—sent as an evidence of God's good will to men, and of God's good will to you!

Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.—Kind Words.

AYER'S PILLS

They Keep the System in Perfect Order

"For years," writes CARRIE E. STOCKWELL, of Chesterfield, N. H., "I was afflicted with an extremely severe pain in the lower part of the chest. The feeling was as if a ton weight was laid on a spot the size of my hand. During the attacks, the perspiration would stand in drops on my face, and it was agony for me to make sufficient effort even to whisper. They came suddenly, at any hour of the day or night, lasting from thirty minutes to ten or twelve hours, leaving as suddenly; but, for several days after, I was quite prostrated and sore. Sometimes the attacks were almost daily, then less frequent. After about four years of this suffering, I was taken down with bilious typhoid fever, and when I began to recover, I had the worst attack of my old trouble I ever experienced. At the first of the fever, my mother gave me Ayer's Pills, my doctor recommending them as being better than anything he could prepare. I continued taking these Pills, and so great was the benefit derived that during nearly thirty years I have had but one attack of my former trouble which yielded readily to the same remedy."

SOME idea of the extent to which college athletics have been carried can be gotten from the report of the treasurer of the University of Pennsylvania Athletic Association for the past year. Receipts from all sources amounted to $98 826 87, and expenditures footed up to $98 936 37. A few games of foot ball brought in $99,754.81, and cost the association only one third of that amount. The players doubtless made more money and became more famous than they ever will again. The royal way in which the public supports foot ball is evidence enough that the college boys are not solely to blame. The public makes heroes of them and pays them richly.

YOU READ in the papers of efforts to have a "cloture" rule adopted in the United States Senate. There are times when we would have a cloture rule in less august bodies. Cloture, or closure as it is more sensibly called, is a cutting off of debate. In Mell's Parliamentary Practice it is stated that a man once delayed the work of the United States Senate two weeks by sheer perversity. We have frequently thought that such delay could be caused in our Associations and Conventions, if there were any one perverse enough to take advantage of the good Baptist principle of freedom of speech and debate. And, indeed, Baptists do have closure in their business meetings, for the sake of expediency. We have special orders; and discussion of a question must end with the taking up of the next order unless a majority votes to defer the order. The United States Senate could introduce closure in the same way—say, for instance, let a certain question be the special order at a certain hour each day until a certain date, and then close debate. There is every reason to provide for the freest expression of opinion. There could be no objection to allowing every Senator to speak his mind; but when filibustering and dilly dallying are resorted to, that is, when reputable men take advantage of just laws, it is time to treat them like any one else who abuses good laws. It is a pity that closure is necessary; but it is, as all who remember the delay in the last extraordinary session can testify.

WE CANNOT say what Congress will do; but if any of our readers are in hopes that it will take a step toward free coinage, he had better disabuse his mind immediately. The truth is, we rather think there is but little for Congress to do. No matter how badly off the country is, Congress cannot help it half so well as it can by adjourning. It has come to be a fact in business that trade halts when the laws of our country are in the hands of legislators. But there is no rest for the weary. Two hundred and seventy-two bills were introduced in a single day recently, and there have been floods of others. There are several new financial measures, and measures also for the establishment of a uniform system of bankruptcy, of postal savings depositories, and of a bureau of public health. Most of the others were looking to appropriations of private or local character.

THE President has sent a special message, very unexpectedly, to Congress, on the Venezuelan dispute. He does not proclaim war, but he advises Congress to let him appoint a commission to look into the Venezuelan question, with a view to asserting the rights and principles of our nation. He says war should be avoided, and he hopes for peace; but, at the same time, he feels called upon to see to it that England takes no advantage in her dispute with Venezuela such as would involve our self respect. As for us, we are not inclined to view the matter gravely. We are sure if, when the matter is looked into, the United States takes issue with England, that nation will be glad to arbitrate. The President informs the world that the United States will not submit "to wrong and injustice and consequent loss of national self-respect, beneath which is shielded and depended a people's safety and greatness." We are not sure that any one has been thinking that we would submit to anything of the kind. There can be no objection, however, to having the matter investigated.

WHAT is the Venezuelan question? We have deferred answering the question on the ground that it would in the end amount to nothing; but popular interest is now thoroughly aroused. The dispute involves questions of history and of topography. If we knew all the facts, it would not be necessary to get Congress to give Mr. Cleveland authority to appoint a commission. People whose minds are made up, who know all about it, convict themselves of prejudice The bone of contention is the narrow strip of territory between the Essequibo and the Morocco rivers. England contends that this territory was owned and partially occupied by Holland in 1814, when that country ceded to Great Britain "the settlements of Demerara, Berbice and Essequibo" Venezuela denies this and claims that Holland's possessions extended only to the east banks of the Essequibo; that the river was the recognized boundary between Holland and Spain in 1810, when, by her act of independence, Venezuela became the legal successor in title to Spain; and hence that the Essequibo is the present rightful boundary between Venezuela and British Guiana. In 1840 England made a survey of the disputed territory, and had the troublesome boundary laid off; but this was without the knowledge or consent of Venezuela. Before this time, and since, England has conceded that this boundary is not a fair one. Venezuela once asked for arbitration, but England declined to arbitrate. In 1850 it was agreed that neither of the parties were to occupy "any of the unoccupied territory in dispute" until the question of boundary could be settled. As long as the country was not known to be worth anything there was no trouble; but eighteen years ago new gold mines were discovered; and when, a few years later, in 1888, the gold fever spread, Venezuela granted a concession of lands to a certain mining syndicate, composed mostly of American citizens. Now the question comes back to the quotation just above—whether this concession reached into "any of the unoccupied territory in dispute." If it did, Venezuela has broken the treaty; if not, England is making a big row unjustly. The land ceded to the mining company "begins at the most westerly estuary of the Orinoco delta and extends thence eastward, or rather northeastward, along the coast 'to the boundaries of British Guiana' without any definite statement as to where those boundaries may be."

So the question is an old and a complicated one. Settlement of it ought never to have been put off. A man or a nation that will face a situation when it is presented will avoid a great deal of trouble.

Now what has this country of ours to do with this? England is not making "any attempt to extend" her "system to any portion of this hemisphere," (the words of the Monroe Doctrine); and so we cannot fall back upon that doctrine to base our right to interfere. England claims to be only asserting her title to property justly her own—obtained from Holland. But her refusal to submit the question to disinterested arbitrators and her domineering policy has caused Mr. Cleveland and a great many others to suspect that she is not going to do the right unless compelled to; and hence the investigation. At any rate the question is one for lawyers and civil engineers, not armies and guns.

WE HOLD the good name of our courts more sacred than all else of government. We are reluctant to say anything or give report to anything lowering their dignity or touching their honor. Nevertheless the conduct of Judge Robinson demands denunciation. A judge who so far forgets himself as to stuff his ears with cotton when a lawyer is pleading for a man's life, or who leaves the bench "to take a smoke," whether a joke or not, whether the room is cold or warm, is unworthy of the high position which he occupies. For the good of the State it would become Judge Robinson to resign. He himself acknowledges that his conduct has been as the newspapers have charged, and his defence is that he was joking. A judge who jokes while he sits over a jury trying a man on his life, is not the man to wear the white robes of Justice or occupy her exalted seat.

IT OUGHT to be known that the Empire of Turkey exists upon the written guarantee that its Christian inhabitants receive justice. This is a stipulation of the treaty of Berlin, which gives Europe and particularly England not only the right but the duty of interfering in any injustice done the Armenians. Notwithstanding this between 12,000 and 25,000 of them have been slaughtered within a year; and there is no sign of let up.

New Testament Studies—No. 14.

BY HIGHT C. MOORE.

THE EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

1. Philippi. This city was founded by Philip of Macedon "to commemorate the addition of a new province to his kingdom and to protect the frontier against the Thracian mountaineers." At the time of Paul it was a Roman colony with civic privileges equal to those enjoyed in the imperial city. It was a prominent city in Macedonia, being located between two mountain ranges and only nine miles from the sea. Its growth was largely due to the fertility of the surrounding plain, its proximity to rich mines of gold, and its position on the great highway from Rome into Asia. Still, it was more prominent in military than in mercantile affairs. There were some Jews in the city, but it was chiefly occupied by Greeks and Romans.

2 Introduction of Christianity. Contrary to his previous plans, Paul was specially directed (Acts 16: 9) to enter Macedonia. This was about 52 A. D. He was accompanied by Silas, Luke, and Timothy. Sailing from Troas they passed Samothracia and Neapolis, and arrived at Philippi, which was the first place in Europe to receive the Gospel. There being no synagogue in Philippi, the missionaries began work at the meeting-place by the riverside beyond the city limits. Lydia, a pious Asiatic, was the first convert. Her own conversion was followed by that of her "household," the first example of family religion, and by her entertainment of the disciples, which was the first example of Christian hospitality in the apostolic church. The conversion of the soothsaying damsel raised a storm of persecution which, in turn, was succeeded by the conversion of the jailer and his household. Thus a strong church was founded which, at the departure of Paul and Silas, was left in the hands of Luke and Timothy.

3. Character of the Philippian Church. Three things concerning the members of the infant church at Philippi merit special consideration: (1) They were severely persecuted (Phil. 1: 28–30), but their faith remained firm and they were unterrified by their adversaries. (2) Their attitude towards Paul was marked by the strongest personal attachment, unfailing obedience to his commands, and liberal contributions to his support. While in Thessalonica, Corinth, and Rome, Paul received pecuniary aid from the Philippian church which alone of all the churches founded by him thus aided him. (3) They were free from doctrinal errors. The Judaizing party, so frequently on Paul's track, had created no schism at Philippi. The single stain upon the church was a dispute, two women being especially implicated (4: 2), but this was individual rather than doctrinal.

4. Date. Various passages in the letter (1: 7, 13, 14, &c.,) classify it among the Epistles of Imprisonment. "Some believe it was written during Paul's confinement at Cæsarea, but "the mention of Cæsar's household (4: 22) and the circumstances described in the first chapter are decisive in favor of Rome." Others assign a very late date. Thus Hilgenfield says, "In this letter we have the Swan song of Paul," and according to Holtzman "it is the last will and testament of the Apostle that we have here." A medium date is more probable, and Dods is perhaps right in his conclusion that "the epistle to the Philippians was written in the second year of the Roman imprisonment, either in the end of 63 or early in 64 A. D."

5. Occasion. This Epistle was called forth primarily in acknowlegment of the generosity of the Philippians. They had sent to the Apostle a timely contribution for his relief in prison. This was conveyed to Rome by Epaphroditus whose arrival was followed by a dangerous illness. Upon his recovery he returned to Philippi, Paul having placed in his hands this letter of affectionate remembrance and sincere appreciation

6. Features. (1) The name of "Christ" occurs 38 times in the Epistle. (2) This has been called the least dogmatic of all the Pauline letters. (3) In no other Epistle addressed to a church does Paul mention "deacons." (4) About twenty times "joy" and words of kindred meaning appear in the letter. (5) This Epistle contains less of censure and more of praise than any other of Paul's extant letters.—Conybeare and Howson. (6) In this letter Paul gives an unusual amount of information concerning himself. (7) It contains a compendious summary and brief recapitulation of what the Apostle had already written to the churches in his other Epistles.—Wordsworth. (8) The Epistle is valuable as illustrating the heroism and tenderness of Paul's character; also for its compressed statement of his gospel as opposed to the teaching of the Judaizers.—Dods. (9) This is "the most epistolary of the Epistles, the easiest and most friendly of letters."

7. Contents. In the first chapter we have the salutation, thanksgiving and prayer for the Philippians, intelligence of the Apostle's condition at Rome, and an exhortation to endurance and concord. In the second, Paul exhorts to lowliness, declares his intentions, and writes of the return of Epaphroditus. In the third, there is warning against "the evil workmen" and an exhortation to perseverance in the Christian race. In the fourth, he enjoins a reconciliation, exhorts to joy and the pursuit of goodness, dwells upon the liberality of the Philippian church, sends salutations, and closes with an autograph benediction. (See Conybeare and Howson).

A more condensed analysis of the Epistle according to chapters is thus given by Pierson: 1. Paul's love and joy; 2. The heavenly citizen and his privileges; 3. Christian progress; 4. Six practical exhortations.

Here also is another interesting division made on the same basis:

1. The Gospel and Christ the Theme.
2. Humility and Christ the Pattern.
3. Earnestness and Christ the Object.
4. Peacefulness and Christ the Strength.

Glimpses of a Great Life.

BY CAPT. D. MCNEILL.

CHAPTER I

"The study of mankind," says a great writer, "is the most improving study for man;" and certainly a retrospective view of the thoughts and actions of one truly great and good, would inspire the reader only to higher and nobler aims. Life is too precious and short to be frittered away and poisoned by reading trashy and impure literature—while that which ennobles and fits for time or eternity may be had. Campbell said:

"Once in the flight of ages past,
There lived a man, and who was he!
Mortal, where'er thy lot is cast,
That man resembled thee!"

Deity impressed his own image upon man and made him a little lower than the angels. What a glorious stamp! What a brilliant introduction to "life's stern bivouac of battle"—to the probationary state—for life is a warfare! May our merciful God fit us for the strife, enable us to "fight a good fight," and give us an abundant entrance to his kingdom for Jesus' sake. Among those who stood in the "forefront of the battle" in our State, and especially in our section, no man stood more heroically, faithfully and earnestly than the REV. JOHN MONROE.

In stature tall, well formed, muscular, he towered above his fellows; with tender-beaming eye and heart and voice full of love, he led the hosts; the strong right arm of his faith lifted high, and from his clasped hand, flashed the polished "sword of the Spirit," giving life and liberty to those "ready to perish." His life was a "burning, shining light"; his words, gentle, earnest and persuasive, eloquent; his presence, a benediction in every home; his spirit, the undimmed image of his Great Captain, whose commands he uttered and whose words he obeyed. Thus girded and equipped, he fought valiantly. "A prince and a great man," he stood for God and humanity, and triumphed over death and the grave! "O death, where is thy sting! O grave, where is thy victory!" over him who receives the plaudit, "Well done" from his Divine Head—echoed and re-echoed from angels and men, "Well done! well done!!"

A further word of preface may be appropriate before we enter on the main, pleasing work before us; for to the writer, it is a work of love. The status of the Rev. John Monroe as a minister can be estimated but by concomitant testimony. Dr. McCarthy in his great work, the Baptist Encyclopedia, classes him as one of the best in the State. Rev. W. H. Jordan, "the old man eloquent," whose home was with us in Wadesboro while he was pastor of the church there, once went with us to see the Rev. John Monroe and preach at Spring Hill. "I feel," said he, as he approached his dwelling, "like this is holy ground, for I regard him as the purest and best minister in the State." Such testimony from such sources is of weight. We believe that as all round man and preacher, he had but few superiors in our whole country. It has been our good fortune to hear very many of our ablest and best ministers, and those we thought nearest his type were McDonald and Hawthorn of Georgia and J. A. W. Thomas of South Carolina—(Broadus, of course, a higher, greater light and power). His living earnestness beamed in their eyes, actions and words. His tender cadence, melting pathos and overwhelming fervor were theirs also. As he, they could hurl thunderbolts "from high Olympus," or rather, from Sinai's top, among the self-willed and proud, or to the convicted, agonized soul, sobbing, "Lord, be merciful to me a sinner"; they, like he, could give the incense of the bruised night-blooming flowers of Gethsemane where Jesus knelt in agony, or the healing balm when he arose in triumph and majesty, their debt paid, to set them free! They with the finish of college and seminary, he a self taught scholar, delivering the same great message—they might surpass him in the art of delivery and smoothness of diction, but could not in unction, earnestness and power. There is nothing "on the dim spot which men call earth" so deserving of thought as our eternal destiny and the "way and the life" offered through Jesus and his love. Fame is a bauble, wealth "taketh wings," and we have here no "abiding city." Of earthly great men the poet says:

"Rome had its Cæsar great and brave,
He lived the heartless conqueror
And died the tyrant's death.
France had its eagle, but his wings,
Though lofty they might soar,
Were spread in false ambition's flight
And steeped in murderous gore."

Could this be said or thought of God's great men!

They lay their armor down
To wear a glorious crown.

Next chapter will tell of the parentage and youth of Rev. John Monroe.

Early Church Services.

BY H. H. HORNE.

It was 200 A. D. before the early church had a special house of worship. Before this time the word church itself meant only a body of believers and not the edifice where they met. At least four places are known to have been frequented by these early Christians and used for worship,—desert places, groves of the martyrs, crypts of the catacombs and private houses. Special mention is made in the Acts of the home of Aquila and Priscilla, as well as of the school of Tyrannus. A private house was provided with an oblong dining hall, containing a couch for reclining at meals, extending around three sides of a table, and usually in three parts, called a triclinium, and used as a table for communion. An elevated seat was used for reading.

Several reasons account for these places of meeting. The early Christians were poor; yet we know from Paul and Justin that offerings were made. Also they were persecuted, oppressed and frequently outlawed. Further we may believe they loved silence and solitude. "Study to be quiet," says Paul. And they felt a natural aversion to all heathen art. So in the secret of His presence, in wild and barren spots, by the lonely martyr's grave, in the safety of a private home, they met and worshiped.

The germ of the service held where they met may be gotten from a letter of the younger Pliny to the Emperor Trajan, 109 A. D. This is the earliest description of Christian worship. They assembled on Sunday at sunrise. The Jewish Sabbath had now become the Christian Sunday. The world's redemption, not its creation, as heretofore, was thus celebrated. A hymn was sung responsively to Christ as God, Pliny tells us. A pledge (sacramentum) was taken to do no evil work. At even they ate "ordinary and innocent food," which was doubtless the Agape, or love feast partaken of in connection with the communion.

From this germ grew a well developed order of service, consisting of preaching, reading of Scripture, prayer, and song. The preaching was a missionary address to the unconverted, of revival character in the purest sense. Any one of age was allowed to speak, which custom was inherited from the Jews who allowed Christ and Paul to make use of their synagogues. These addresses were such as made by Peter to Cornelius in Acts x, and by Paul at Antioch in Pisidia in Acts xiii. It was a familiar exposition of Scripture and exhortation to repentance and a holy life. This manner of speaking became gradually confined to the clergy as an exclusive privilege.

The reading of Scripture was also transferred into the Christian church from the Jewish synagogue. (Acts xiii, 15; xv, 21). New Testament, the gospels and apostolic epistles were read as well as Moses and the prophets. From Col. iv, 16, and 1 Thes. v, 27, we learn that these epistles were intended for public use and were addressed to whole congregations. We may imagine with what joy the holy brethren heard one of these epistles read and how gladly Thessalonica exchanged letters with Laodicea.

The prayers, like ours, consisted of petition, intercession, and thanksgiving. Though a descendant, too, from Judaism, a new view was incorporated in it, that of Father. Every important act was accompanied by prayer. They obeyed the command, "Pray without ceasing." Sometimes on occasions of special solemnity, as the sending of Paul and Barnabas to the Gentiles, fasting was added to prayer (Acts xiii, 3; xiv, 23; 1 Cor. vii, 5). Though the Psalms and Lord's prayer were early used, there was no liturgy till the third century. Paul bowed the knees in praying (Eph. iii, 14), but the usual posture of the early Christians was standing with outstretched arms in oriental fashion.

The songs were forms of prayer, the Psalms of the Old Testament being used. The Lord sanctioned this custom at the Supper. The singing of Psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs was enjoined by Paul to the Ephesians and Colossians as a means of social edification.

The church added original psalms, hymns, doxologies, and benedictions. As for example, the song of the heavenly host at the birth of the Saviour, the "Nunc dimittis" of Simeon, the Magnificat of the Virgin Mary, the Benedictus of Zacharias, and Peter's thanksgiving after his miraculous deliverance. (Acts iv, 24–30; cf. Psalm 2).

The Epistles furnish us with fragments of of hymns, such as Eph. v, 14; 2 Tim. ii, 11-1; 1 Pet. iii, 10–13. Passages from the Apocalypse are hymnal in character, such as. i, 5–8; iii, 7; v, 9, 12, 13; xi, 15, 17; xv, 18; xix. 6–8. These hymns were sung by individuals (1 Cor. xiv, 26), or by the whole assembly.

The first express confession of faith is the testimony of Peter: "Lord, to whom shall we go but unto thee? for thou hast the words of eternal life, and we believe and are sure that thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." The so called "Apostles' Creed" grew out of a baptismal formula. The sacraments were two—[illegible] antitypes of circumcision and [illegible] and related to each other as [illegible] and growth of the Christian [illegible].

The Biblical Recorder.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1895.

J. W. BAILEY, - - - - - EDITOR.
J. C. CADDELL, AGENT AND CORRESPONDENT.

ALREADY Chicago University's out-reaching influences are provoking discussion. We see the Watchman of Boston and the Standard of Chicago—two giants—arrayed the one against the other for "affiliation," as surrendering to Chicago University the autonomy of a college is called. Several Baptist colleges have already affiliated, and eight or ten others are being induced.

CHRISTMAS week has been holiday in the RECORDER office from the beginning, on the grounds, first, that the force needed rest; secondly, that a week at the end of the year is needed to clean up and start afresh with the new year, and third, that the failure to get the paper one week increases ability of subscribers to appreciate it.

We are going to break over this year, and see how it goes to get the paper out as usual. We believe our subscribers will appreciate its presence this week more than its absence. At any rate we will have a merry Christmas in getting the paper out as a Christmas present to its friends.

May happiness without alloy be in every home the RECORDER enters; and may the happy ones not forget to make their blessings joyful for others.

WE ARE about to begin another year. We can sing Ebenezer. But there must be more than singing, if we wish to sing that encouraging work-song next year this time; for God helps workers, not singers merely. We want to raise $15,000 for State Missions and Sunday-schools, $12,000 for our Orphanage, $9,000 for Foreign Missions, $6,000 for Home Missions, $4,000 for Ministerial Education, $1,500 for Ministerial Relief, $20,000 to complete our university for women, and not less than $10,000 for Wake Forest College. How much? $87,500.

There are at least 30,000 families of Baptists in North Carolina. Their average income is at least $250. Total, $7,500,000. One tenth, $750,000. This will pay for church expenses and extension, pastors' salaries, and everything else, and certainly leave more than $87,000 for the objects of this Convention.

Do not the Baptists of North Carolina give one-tenth to the Lord? Are we less free with our gifts to God than the children of Israel? We are not bound by the law that bound them; but how greatly are we bound by Love? Surely we will not do less than they.

Let each and every one of us begin now and give at least a tenth to God this year, and he will bless us.

THAT was a remarkable article we published week before last—"Reflections on Notable Events of Recent Baptist History." It was published primarily with the purpose of giving the reader a concise and unbiased statement of several important and meaning matters. We do not believe that "Baptists in two sections of the United States shall drift further and further apart until they shall constitute two distinct ecclesiastical types," (any more distinct than they now are), as the author seems to fear. On the other hand, two scenes upon the floor of our Convention at Greensboro were eloquent in their emphasis of the desire for fraternity of spirit and work between North and South. The plans of co-operation in work among the negroes will be a growing, binding force in this respect. The other scene was that of Dr. Hufham glorying in Dr. Bitting's speech and praising the American Baptist Publication Society.

There are no differences between Northern and Southern Baptists on sectional lines. As was pointed out in the article week before last, there are quite distinct schools of thought and habits of work; but this should not be charged against the blue coats or the gray coats of 'sixty-one. Let the differences be; let us insist upon our beliefs and our practices. There is no danger that a Baptist seminary in the North will out grow its usefulness as a Baptist institution; there is no danger that the American Baptist Publication Society will go out of the business of publishing Baptist literature.

But, for all this, we would rather patronize our Southern Baptist Theological Seminary because it is as good as the best, if not the best, on God's earth; and because a young man who goes there fosters an acquaintanceship which will make him stronger throughout the Southern Baptist Convention. And let us use our Conventional periodicals because they are ours, because they are as good as the best, and because the people upon them go to the work for our Convention.

He is a small man who goes or does not go to a seminary because it is located North [illegible] and smaller still is he who uses [illegible] literature on such grounds.

NEITHER POVERTY NOR RICHES.

This was the prayer of Agur, the son of Jakeh. In theory, we all admit its wisdom. Practically, most of us are very sure as to the first half; as to the second, we are not so certain. Never was the race for wealth more eager than it is to-day. Not only are the young dazzled by the appeal that riches make to their imaginations, but the middle-aged and even the aged become envious, dissatisfied and soured. And too often, alas, both young and old succumb to the allurements of wealth, and resort to unfair, over-reaching, dishonest methods to secure it.

A calm survey of the conditions of happy living, of peace of mind, of the development of Christian character, will surely be enough to convince an open mind that great riches are not worthy objects of desire or labor. And one who has been favored with a wide range of observation of all classes of society will be no less certain that the most useful and happy lives are passed by those who are in only moderate circumstances.

We do not for a moment sympathize with the current tirades against the rich. To be rich is not necessarily to be bad, much less criminal. And in order to make our point it is not necessary, even if it would be right, to blink the fact that all the virtues have occasionally blossomed and borne fruit in the homes of the wealthy. It is possible for a good man to be a millionaire. Capacity, thrift, industry, honesty, have made many rich, and a few very rich, in a perfectly legitimate way. And not a few have rightfully inherited fortunes which were honestly acquired.

Nor are we among those who think that a rich man is necessarily a curse to a community. On the other hand, he may be, incidentally, a great blessing. If a millionaire were to settle in every township in our State, a large proportion of the people would be benefited thereby. If, better still, a native citizen in each county should by perfectly just and honest methods become a millionaire, large numbers of his neighbors would surely become sharers in his prosperity.

But as to whether it would be best for the man himself and for his family, is another question. And this is just the question before us.

As a matter of fact, does wealth, in the long run, make people happy? At first, we are inclined to say yes. We think only of the things that money will buy and of the ease that it will secure. But reflection will suggest that this is a superficial judgment, and observation will prove what reflection suggests. Wealth, it is true, is masterful; it can speak in the imperative mood and command many of the means of pleasure. But not all, nor the most important. The best, the essential things, are unpurchasable. A rich man may sometimes have these essential things. But that is in spite of his riches, not because of them. We have good authority for believing that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things that he possesseth."

We see the silk attired, fur-wrapped lady roll by in her carriage, or the millionaire lolling in the back piazza of his private car. Envious thoughts begin to rise. But stop:—are they happy? We may not ask them, but we can watch them. Are they not often restless, petulant, querulous? Do they seem to be more contented than others? Does their bearing suggest that there are no skeletons in their closets? Do we not read anxiety and black care in some faces, hardness and selfishness in others? Do we often hear from them the spontaneous, ringing laughter that is an outward sign of a happy heart?

No; peace of mind, contentment, happiness, are not purchasable commodities. Money can buy things, externals, the accidents of living. But the roots of happiness lie too deep to be watered by wealth. Money is king in its own limited realm, but there are vast provinces which heed not the sway of its sceptre. And all these best, unpurchasable elements of happiness are really more apt to be possessed by one who is neither rich nor poor, by the man who is above want, but has his work to do and his economies to practice.

"But surely one may pray for riches in order that, through them, he may be more useful." By all means, provided that we are absolutely certain that the object of the prayer will not be forgotten if the prayer is answered. Somehow, in most cases, it seems to be. Rich people—even Christian men and women—do not give as much, in proportion to their incomes, as do those who are in moderate circumstances. There are shining and noble exceptions, rich men and women who really believe that they are God's stewards, and who prove their belief by gifts which are as unostentatious as they are munificent.

But these are exceptions. The rich are never rich enough. "What is my paltry million. My neighbor has three millions. I cannot begin to give yet. When I get more able, call on me." The style of living adapted by many of the wealthy would empty the purse of Fortunatus. But if this should not use up all the income, what is left must be re invested for future gain. May none of our readers ever be so poor as some of the rich imagine themselves to be when asked to be useful through their money. Instead of praying for more, let us so use our few talents or dollars as to prove that we are fit to have more.

But even if wealth could buy happiness or would certainly be used for good purposes, the prayer of Agur would still be the proper one for a Christian to offer, unless it could be shown that the possession of wealth tends to spiritual prosperity. For our business in this world is not to be happy (though the good Lord often makes his children so), but to be good and grow to be better. And few will contend that people have as good a chance to lead sober and godly lives in palaces as in less pretentious homes. Millionaires' children are usually handicapped from the beginning in the struggle for eternal life. And the rich, tempted toward worldliness, pride, fashionable display, have a harder task in treading in the footsteps of the lowly Nazerene than their less wealthy neighbors. No, those who are neither poor nor rich have the better chance to get to heaven, and to enjoy religion on the way thither. In congenial work they find deliverances from many seductions of the devil. Experience proves that to be delivered from the necessity for exertion is no real blessing. Observation shows that those who possess moderate means are usually less selfish, live more virtuous lives, and pass more readily through the narrow gate that openeth into the kingdom of God.

NEWS NOTES.

....Rev. W. L. Ferrall has given up his Snow Hill field, and for the present is in Raleigh.

....Mrs. Mamie Hatcher requests us to say that her address is Liberty, N. C., instead of Siler City, as was stated last week.

....Rennert, N. C., is without a pastor, Rev. A. R. Pittman having resigned. Bro. Pittman serves Long Branch church instead of Rennert.

....It is a good week to remember the orphans. If too late for Christmas day, never mind; the orphans will be happy to hear from you any time.

....The Board of State Missions and Sunday schools will meet in the Raleigh Mission Rooms, Jan. 7. A full attendance of the Board is especially desired.

....We thank Capt. Fred. C. Smith of Chapel Hill for informing us that Rev. J. W. Watson has received calls from Cool Spring and Moore's Chapel churches for 1896.

....Many of our readers will join us in sympathy for Rev. C. A. Jenkens and wife of New Brunswick, N. J., who lost their three year-old daughter, Irma Louise, recently.

....Rev. Geo. J. Dowell of Durham and Rev. J. F. MacDuffie of East Durham were in Raleigh last week. Bro. MacDuffie sets the mark for Ministerial Relief this year at $2,500.

....Two of the Baltimore churches—Seventh Street and Fuller Memorial—have had their calls accepted by Rev. W. J. E. Cox of Staunton, Va., and Rev. S. C. Clopton, D. D., of Anniston, Ala., respectively.

....The Commonwealth, Philadelphia, is not backed by the American Baptist Publication Society, as we stated. The fact of its address being that of the Society signifies no more than that our contemporary has rooms in the Society's building.

....Mrs. Mary Fulton, who died in Asheville, Nov. 30th, was eighty-four years old. She had property estimated to be worth $8,000 to $10,000, and it is understood the bulk of it will go to the First Presbyterian church of Asheville.—Charlotte Observer.

....Some of our readers sent boxes last year to Rev. E. L. Compere, home missionary to Indian Territory. They with others will be sorry to hear of his death. He was one of the foremost of our workers. He gave his life to the work; and is now resting from his labors.

....After the first of January, Rev. Samuel Saunders will begin his work with the Chowan Baptist church at Winton, giving two Sundays to that church and two to the Murfreesboro church. This necessitated his giving up the Union and Seaboard churches.—Murfreesboro Index.

....Rev. A. B. Vincent, distinct missionary of the Negroes, requests us to again call attention to the New Era Institute, to be held at Lumberton beginning Jan. 8. We have seen the program, and it will be very helpful to those who attend. Aside from this, several distinguished brethren will take part.

....This week we begin printing the biography of Rev. John Monroe, one of the mainstays of our cause—a leader in Zion—in the early days of our history. The papers will be of especial interest to the Robeson section of our State, but they will repay any one who reads them. Good biography is most excellent reading for young men and women.

....It is stated in some of our exchanges that Elon College, N. C., has received a gift of $100,000 from a Northern benefactor.

....We were glad to have visits Monday from Rev. A. D. Hunter, Rev. J. M. White, and J. H. Holloman of Apex.

....Georgia brethren are planning to make 1896 an educational year in that State. Circumstances make any other course in North Carolina unwise and unthought of.

....We are anxious to get the minutes of the Associations as soon as they are published. We purpose binding them for reference; and we cannot have the set for any year bound until the minutes of every Association are in hand. Will not the clerks oblige us?

....We have found that nothing so destroys the force of an article as length. A man who writes a column (say a thousand words) on a subject will obtain three readers where the broadside writer has one. The practice of condensation without sacrificing force or clearness is a most helpful one.

...."He sits there a quiet listener and says nothing, but he is speaking through every man that has stood upon this platform to day," said a brother, of Rev. C. E. Taylor, D. D., Wake Forest's able president, on education day at Greensboro.—Religious Herald's note on N. C. Baptist State Convention.

....Miss Helen Culver has given Chicago University $1,000,000, to be devoted to the research and spread of knowledge in biological science. By a proposition made by Mr. Rockefeller this gift calls for a like one from him. It is stated that a school of medicine will be established in the University.

....Through a gift of $75,000, jointly made by Mr. W. W. Spence of Baltimore and Mr. George W. Watts of Durham, N. C., and through other donations, making a total of $125,000, the removal of the Southern Presbytherian Union Theological Seminary from Hampden Sydney, Va., to Richmond is made practicable.

....The Baptists of Raleigh will assemble in the First Raleigh Baptist church next Sunday night, Dec. 29th, to consider matters in regard to City missions. Rev. A. D. Hunter has given up the place of City missionary, having his time more largely filled by a field of good country churches. His work in Raleigh was progressive and substantial, and we regret to have him leave.

....The American Baptist Missionary Union anticipates a debt this year of about $300,000. Great efforts will be made to bring it much lower. The Secretary says unless it is reduced, many missionaries will be recalled. No little of this debt, and of other mission debts as well, is due to the enthusiasm of Centennial year; and we are glad the next centennial is a good way off.

....Evangelist Hutson of Richmond, Va., who has been conducting the series of meetings in the Tabernacle Baptist church for the last two weeks, closed the meetings Sunday night and left for his home Monday morning. There were twenty five professions as a result of the meetings. Only a portion of them, however, have as yet given in their names to unite with the church.—Newbern Journal.

....The election of Dr. N. B. Cobb as statistician of our Convention will meet with general approval. There is need for such work. In his position Bro. Cobb will be able to stir up the clerks of churches, etc., so that our associational reports may be full. Every blank in every church report must be filled, if the minutes are to be authentic. We hope to see renewed effort made in this direction, and Bro. Cobb shall have hearty co operation at our hands.

....Bro. J. N. Booth has resigned at Union. He has been there for several years and has done a fine work. We would regret very much to lose Bro. Booth from the State, and we do hope some of our pastorless churches will call him at once. He is a safe, wise pastor, and a fine preacher. He came to us from North Carolina and those brethren will be delighted to see him back in the Old North State. We hope they may be disappointed.——We understand that Bro. A. McA. Pittman has resigned Santee church, at Elloree and Corinth. These are good churches, and we are sorry Bro. Pittman has felt it to be his duty to resign. He is a useful man, good preacher and devoted pastor, and we hope he will be called to some field in South Carolina. His North Carolina brethren have been anxious to get him for several years, and we hope some of our pastorates will speak out at once.—Baptist Courier. Two good Wake Forest men, who have done fine work in South Carolina, but are capable of doing still better in North Carolina.

....Two years ago meetings were held at noon in Niblo's Garden, New York City, and at 3:30 p. m. in Cooper Union on week days, and thousands of people heard the gospel preached and sung. It was almost a startling revelation to many that more non-Christians, men and women, could be induced to go to these meetings during the busy week than could be drawn into any one church in New York City on Sunday. Hundreds became Christians, and through the daily press the influence of these meetings was felt all over the country. It has been decided, therefore, to rent Cooper Union for a mass meeting of religious workers and all others who will come on every Monday at 3:30 p. m. Rev. A. C. Dixon of Brooklyn will speak at that hour Monday afternoon, January 6th, and the best singers that can be secured will give the people the gospel in song. Mr. Dixon's subject will be "Eternal Life and Death." The prayers of the Christian people everywhere are requested for God's blessing upon this work. Its twofold aim is to reach non-church goers with the gospel which "is the power of God unto salvation," and to inspire Christians of all evangelical creeds to become "workers together with God" in winning to Christ the lost thousands of this great city.

....Rev. M. A. Adams takes charge of French Broad church, Asheville, next week. We do not feel that he is being separated from us, even if he is going to the Western Convention. Bro. Felix, Bro. Tucker and Bro. Jordan brought the mountain country close to us at Greensboro by their active interest in our Convention. Bro. Adam's work at Monroe and Reidsville has been very creditable, indeed, and he has taken a high stand in our work in general. That he will do well in Asheville we have no doubt, and we commend him to his new charge.

....We gather from the table published by the Baptist Courier that there are in South Carolina 448 ordained Baptist ministers, 875 Baptist churches, 82,634 Baptists; 682 Sunday schools, 4 684 officers and teachers, 37,471 pupils. There were 3 656 baptisms last year. Contributions as follows: State Missions $8,303 43, Home Missions $3,972 57, Foreign Missions $7,262.65, Education $1,431 06; Orphanage $4,295 20, aged ministers $966.63, miscellaneous $116,536 40; aggregate $143,678. We have a detailed report of the South Carolina Convention in this issue.

....The statistics of the Western N. C. M. E. Conference for 1895 show: Infants baptized, 2,150; adults, 1,641; Epworth Leagues, 90; members of the League, 3,213; Sunday-schools, 673; teachers, 4 515; scholars, 44 973—an increase of scholars of 2 205; paid to Conference claimants, $4,513.37; contributed for foreign missions, $8,674 18; domestic missions, $4 816 19—an increase of over $600. Eleven missions had become self sustaining. For Paine and Lane Institutes, $157 05. Our colleges are: Davenport College, Weaverville College, and a half interest in Trinity. This meagerness of our educational statistics is accounted for by the fact that Greensboro Female College and Asheville Female College, to which we give our patronage, are not the property of the church, and therefore never reported. There are 196 local preachers, and 65,864 members of the church; $5,000 assessed for education, and appropriated to Trinity College, Trinity High School, and Weaverville College.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

....Rev. W. P. Fife's recent meeting in Wilson, N. C., resulted in 900 professions of faith, and great quickening to church members generally. Hundreds of people attended from churches in the surrounding country, and numbers of these, as well as citizens of Wilson, were converted. Mr. Price, one of Mr. Fife's assistants, is a member of Dr. Stakely's church, the First Baptist of Washington; the other, Mr. Browne, the singer, is a Methodist. A very large per cent. of the converts was men, a rather unusual thing.——W. P. Fife, the drummer evangelist, is in Winston, N. C., preaching to great crowds of people. In the three weeks' services which he has held, more than one thousand professed conversion, including all the saloon keepers and bar-keepers in the place, and now the business men and the citizens generally are asked to help these men to go out of the whiskey business, which they propose to do.—Evangel (Baltimore) Dec 18. The Evangel is not in hearing distance of the truth. If all its reports of the work of professional revivalists are only half as inflated as these they are outrageous misrepresentations. We wonder if the "evangelists" send the Evangel these reports.

....We learn from the North Carolina Christian Advocate that Rev. G. A Oglesby has been appointed Missionary Secretary of the North Carolina and M. E. Conference. His work will be somewhat like that of Secretary of our State Board of Missions. It is a departure from the usual mode of Conference work, for the State field has heretofore been left to the Presiding Elders. It is significant that the Conference recognizes the need for increased exertion in this respect. We quote statistics of the Conference as given by our contemporary: Number of local preachers are 123; number of white members, 68,777; number of infants baptized, ——; number of adults baptized, 1,897; number of Epworth Leagues, 21; members of Epworth Leagues, 1,405; number of Sunday schools, 659; Sunday-school teachers, 4,789; Sunday school scholars, 38,303; Foreign Missions ——; Church Extension, $1,984; American Bible Society, $359 80; amount paid to P. E's, $11,759; to preachers in charge, $85 169; Bishops, $1,587 18; number of church edifices, 644; value, $778,269." From newspaper reports we infer that the Advocate was not endorsed as the organ of the Conference. We hope the matter will be adjusted, and that our contemporary will continue to have the confidence and support of the people it has served so long.

...."A number of writers and some editors are advancing the proposition for consolidation of Presbyterian seminaries, says the St. Louis Presbyterian. Since the removal of Union to Richmond it is urged that Columbia be joined with it, and made the school for the Synods east of the mountains. It is further urged that Clarksville and Louisville being too near each other to build two large seminaries, that Clarksville be moved to some point in Texas or Arkansas, for the real Southwest, and Louisville be supported by the central Synods. This would make three seminaries, and by no means equally divide the territory or communicants. We have what we believe is a better division. Consolidate Columbia and Union at Richmond, and make it the Seminary for the Synods of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida, which five Synods have over half the whole number of communicants in the church, and no part of which is more than eighteen hours from Richmond save the lower part of Florida. Then consolidate Clarksville and Louisville at Louisville, and make it the seminary for the remaining Synods, which have less than half of the whole number of communicants, and the remotest part—Southern and Western Texas—is within thirty-six hours of Louisville. Outside of Texas from nearly any point Louisville may be reached in from twelve to eighteen hours."

A Glance Over the Recorder for 1895.

It can be said without boasting that in the year now closing, the RECORDER has been the medium for the expression of the best thought of the Baptists of North Carolina. A glance at the list following shows not only what a fine array of articles we have published, but also that every phase of our work, every phase of thought and opinion, and every part of our State has had free expression, from competent hands, in these columns. We are proud of our list of contributors; they are worthy of the Convention they represent. We might have obtained articles from men of wide reputation and big titles, but they would not have been so good and representative as these. Our first aim is to represent North Carolina Baptist thought and life; but we have also, through articles and editorials, endeavored to keep our readers informed of Baptist affairs in general everywhere, and also of the work of other denominations.

WAS IT WORTH TWO DOLLARS?

A Word from Fayetteville.

The Greensboro Convention of 1895 will pass into history as a business session. Committees worked rapidly and pressed business from the beginning to the end. I am glad this was so, and hope it will be the motto of every session to transact business for the Lord with the utmost speed as well as care. Three sessions a day kept the brethren on the go. This feature of the meeting compensated for what it lacked in speech making, though there were several very fine speeches.

The election of John E. White as the successor of Durham was not a surprise to many. From the very first I had heard him mentioned. He brings to the work a strong body, a well trained mind, a gifted tongue, and some experience in the work of the Master. If the brethren of the State will bear him up to God in daily prayer, there is no reason why the State mission work should not continue in its onward course. Bro. White deserves and should have the prayers and help of the Baptists all over the State. Let us all rally to his support, and make his work easier than was Durham's.

I was also highly gratified at the strong and tender words said of the young editor of the RECORDER. Every one was deserved; not one was wasted. May these two young men work together as true yoke fellows in the great work the Convention has thrown upon their shoulders, and while they are doing this work, let us give unto them our earnest co-operation and sympathy.

The work in Fayetteville moves along well. Difficulties have beset us in the work, but with God's help some have vanished, and the church in annual conference the week before the Convention passed a strong resolution endorsing the pastor in his fight in the liquor traffic. The conference was the largest since I have been here. Thus the church has put herself squarely against the liquor traffic and the people are enthusiastic in the work which lies before them. Our churches everywhere have been afraid of being left dead if they made too vigorous a war against evil, and they have been left as dead by God's spirit. Better be left dead by the devil in a great battle with him, than to be left dead by God because we feared to fight for him. No man can be left dead in the fight with the devil, because he feels like a coward before the brave soldier of the cross.

Christ is our Captain, and many of us have failed in his fight because we have deserted him for the applause of the world and inconsistent church members.

From Rev. G. P. Bostick in China.

Dear Recorder:—I did not arrive in the United States August the 10th, as you announced I would. I had meant to leave here about July 1st, but could not tell within ten days when I would land in America. My plans to go were broken up by the sudden and unexpected death of our dear Sister King, and the consequent necessity for Bro. King to be absent for a couple of months. I did not say anything publicly about my going, because I felt that things might occur to cause change of plans. I have no plans now as to when I shall go, but am earnestly seeking God's guidance in the matter. I may go soon, or I may defer for sometime yet.

Brethren King and Crocker returned last night from a trip of two months to Tungchow, Chefoo, &c., and seem to be in good health. I have seen them for only a short time.

I spent four days last week tramping through the mountain villages northeast of this city, preaching in about forty villages in the four days, spending the three nights at inns, paying about five cents a day for the food I bought and lodging. I carried butter, cocoa milk and sugar. I had an interesting time, and trust some seeds fell on good ground. I suppose I was the first missionary ever to go into any of those villages. So you can see that it is pre eminently with us here in the interior a time of seed sowing, and yet we have great encouragement. In every village that I entered but one I found some who listened apparently with interest. I met with opposition in only one of them. This was by a proud pharisaical Confucianist, who abused me and Christianity, and urged the people not to listen, but this caused one old woman to draw a little nearer and say with emphasis, "Preach to us, it is good to hear," and of course I preached with increased vigor till I had to leave for my inn at night fall. I hope to live to see some earnest Christians in that region. Dr. Crawford and I are going out again (D. V) tomorrow.

Bro. Blalock is still in Japan, or was at last reports. His eyes were troubling him. Bro. Royall and Miss Sullivan were married at Chiningchow the last of September and went to Shanghai on business. Bro. Herring was at last accounts busy at Chiningchow. The Leagues have secured a good house in Shui Pei. Sister Crawford, Mrs. Bostick and Miss Humphries visit the women in this region nearly every day. The women seem much freer here than in any place of China I have yet lived in.

We are all pretty well. God bless all the saints at home. Fraternally,

G. P. BOSTICK.

Enjoyed the Convention.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Please permit me to say through your columns how much I enjoyed the recent session of the North Carolina Baptist Convention at Greensboro. I am not only grateful for the personal kindness which I received and for the generous help accorded my Students' Fund, but on other accounts also it was a great pleasure to be at the Convention.

This was the first time that I have enjoyed that privilege. I find in going about that different state Conventions of Baptists have their different ways of doing things, and yet I am very much impressed with the substantial oneness of our people. I was greatly interested in hearing Bro. Hartwell Edwards comment upon the remarkable fact that so large a per cent of North Carolina's population is native to the soil. In these days of promiscuous foreign imigration, that is a blessing to be highly esteemed. I was particularly impressed with the strength of the Convention. Many things, of course, were noticeable, but this stands out in my mind as I recall the scenes of those few days. The Baptists of North Carolina, if their representatives in the Convention really do represent them, are a strong and vigorous party of the Lord's people. Grave things lie before them. May the Lord give them grace to use their strength for His glory and the building up of His Kingdom on earth! Fraternally yours,

From Newbern.

Dear Recorder:—We are moving along in a quiet way and trust that great good is being done. Our Sunday school and congregations are increasing all the time. Our church enjoyed a revival season recently, in which the pastor was assisted by Bro. Tyree of Durham. Bro. Tyree is a man of deep spirituality and possesses great power as an earnest preacher of the Word. His sermons were a spiritual feast, and his stay among us was a benediction to us all. There were two additions to our membership during the meeting. I am greatly encouraged in the work here, and how could I be otherwise, while I have such staunch helpers who stand by me and sympathize with me in every good word and work? Surely the Lord has greatly blessed me in sending me to labor among these good people.

Three years ago some of the brethren of the Middle Street church conceived the idea or doing mission work in the destitute sections surrounding Newbern. At that time this church and Fort Barnwell were the only churches we had in Craven county. Active steps were taken, and the church raised a salary of four hundred dollars, and purchased a good horse and buggy. The services of Rev. J. W. Rose were secured, and he began traveling through the county preaching at various points. His faithful, earnest work has resulted in the organization of four churches—Cove, Spring Garden, Truitt, and Vanceboro. There is a good house of worship at each of these places except the last named, and the young churches are active and prosperous, and promise soon to become strong Baptist centres. Our church rejoices with Bro. Rose over the success which has crowned their mutual efforts. The Lord has blessed and owned the work, and we feel encouraged to go forward.

But Bro. Rose has resigned the work, and has accepted a field embracing La Grange and other points. Our prayers go with him, and we congratulate those churches which have secured the services of this earnest man of God. And now we need a man to take Bro. Rose's place. We want a young, unmarried man, who is not seeking an easy place, but who is willing to do hard work for the Master. We will pay him a very good salary and furnish him with a horse and buggy. And besides, I will furnish him free of charge a room here in the parsonage so that he can make Newbern his headquarters. I shall be glad to correspond with some young brother who is willing to work with us. The Jones county field can also be supplied by us in this way.

Bro. J. E. Hutson is aiding Bro. Burgess in a meeting at the Tabernacle. He is a plain, practical preacher of the Word, and depends largely on the power of the Spirit.

I think Bro. White is the right man in the right place, and I pray the Lord to fill him with the Spirit.

Fraternally yours, SAM. J. PORTER.

From the Concord Pastor.

Dear Recorder:—I desire to express my gratification at the work of the convention. I had intended to be there, but sickness in my family and death in my congregation prevented. Also four of my young people had decided to change their names for life and asked for my services at that particular time. And of course I could not disappoint them. Hence I missed the entire session.

But the irrepressible Daily brought me information of what was going on.

Of course every Baptist in the state that marches anywhere about the front was anxious to know the result of the labors of the committee appointed to select a successor to the inimitable Dr. Durham. I for one was very fearful of an unwise choice. But the headline of the Convention dispersed my fears. True I had not once thought of Bro. White as the man, but his name at once dispelled my fears. I have had a high regard for his good common sense since I read his articles on "Call to the Ministry." As much as he was attacked, he hit extremely close to the heart of the matter. I feel that the Convention came as near filling the place as it possibly could. And I look for good and efficient work from Bro. White.

And at last the Young People's Movement has issued in something effective, I trust. The young people are the people, because they are coming while the older ones are going. Yet the most needed work is still unfinished. The machinery is important, but the supreme need is the working of the material. Now if some good, efficient brother of experience will give us some practical hints on methods and working of young people's societies, at least some of us will read with interest. How can we organize and hold and develop the young people in a church where all or nearly all work seventy-five hours a week? Can not Bro. Bailey nominate a strong committee on Ways and Means for the benefit of us that are as yet unsuccessful in this matter. Our congregations have been this fall the largest all around since I came to Concord nearly four years ago. Last Sunday I received two members by letter at the morning service and one at the night service. And there are some eight or ten more in sight. When I came here I had a far different report of the field from the actual condition of it to-day. There is a bright future for Concord. It must and it will one day be a strong church.

Fraternally, J. O. ALDERMAN.

Wake Forest Notes.

The lectures given in connection with the Bible bands this session are intended to bring out the general atmosphere and character of the time of Christ. On Sunday, Dec. 8th, Prof. C. E. Brewer delivered a very profitable lecture on "Science in the Time of Christ." On Sunday, Dec. 22nd, Dr. J. B. Powers delivered a lecture on "The Healing Art in the Time of Christ."

Dr. Whitman, President of Columbia University, Washington, D. C., has been chosen to preach the sermon to the Graduating Class of '96.

Orators elected by the Faculty for the Commencement are: Phi. Society—G. N. Bray, Camden county; Speight Dowell, Durham; J. H. Gore, Jr., Wilmington. Eu. Society—Bruce Benton, Union county; W. G. Briggs, Raleigh; I. M. Meekins, Tyrrell county.

On the night of Dec. 11th, Rev. T. C. Britton, returned missionary from China, preached a forcible and inspiring sermon from 2 Tim. 2: 1–13. His theme was "The Good Soldier of Jesus Christ." He pointed out the best points and traits in a good, patriotic soldier, and applied them to the Christian. "The soldier loves his country, lives for his country, fights for his country, and dies for his country; so should the Christian soldier for the kingdom of Christ."

The brethren here are quite as hearty as any we have heard in seconding the action of the Convention in selecting Rev. John E. White to succeed Dr. C. Durham.

The W. F. Historical and Economical Society was organized last Thursday night. It will meet once a month to discuss matters historical, economical and social. President—Prof. N. Y. Gulley; Vice-President—Mr. J. H. Gore, Jr.; Secretary—Mr. H. B. Folk. Dr. Hendren Gorrell, Professor of Modern Languages and History, is the starter of this movement. He is an enthusiastic student of history and economy, and will no doubt do all in his power to make the work of the Society pleasant and permanent.

Resolutions of Scotland Neck Church.

This church has heard with deep sorrow of the death of the Rev. Columbus Durham. We remember with pride and gratitude his early and intimate connection with us and how faithfully and zealously he served the church, virtually as pastor for several months, when the church was almost in its infancy, when its membership was small and weak. The series of meetings held by him in 1876 is regarded as the auspicious beginning of our successful church life. It was his privilege at that time to baptize many of the leading men and women of the community, and from that meeting our church began a career of continually enlarging usefulness. He loved us and we loved him. Many times since then he has ministered among us, always to our joy and profit. To the majority of our members he was personally known and to them he sustained the relation of a warm personal friend. Therefore it is Resolved 1. That we feel not only the great loss which the denomination has sustained but we have a profound feeling of personal bereavement as well.

2. That we remember with grateful pride his exalted ability, his tireless energy, his masterly leadership, his whole hearted consecration, his heroic self sacrifice, and his faithful devotion to the Master's service.

3. That we beg the privilege of putting on record these testimonials of our appreciation of our friend and brother.

4. That we extend our sympathy to the bereaved family, and pray that God may comfort them in this time of great affliction.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of the church and a copy be sent to the family of the deceased, and a copy to the BIBLICAL RECORDER for publication.

Literary.

The Century Magazine began in the November number with an account of an English parliamentary election. It will be the leading feature in fiction for the coming twelve months, other and shorter novels being contributed by W. D. Howells, F Hopkinson Smith, Mary Hallock Foote, and Amelia E. Barr. There will also be contributions from Mark Twain and Rudyard Kipling (the latter furnishing to the Christmas Century one of the most powerful stories he has ever written); a series of articles on the great naval engagements of Nelson, by Captain Alfred T. Mahan, author of "Influence of Sea Power upon History"; three brilliant articles on Rome, contributed by Marion Crawford, and superbly illustrated by Castaigne, who made the famous World's Fair pictures in The Century; a series of articles by George Kennan, author of "Siberia and the Exile System," on the Mountains and the Mountaineers of the Eastern Caucasus, describing a little known people; articles by Henry M. Stanley and the late E. J. Glave on Africa; a series of papers on "The Administration of the Cities of the United States," by Dr. Albert Shaw. The Century will also contain during the year a great number of papers on art subjects, richly illustrated. Prof Sloan's "Life of Napoleon," with its wealth of illustration, will reach its most interesting part,—the rise of the conqueror to the height of his power, and his final overthrow and exile. In order that new subscribers may obtain the whole of this monumental work, the publishers have made a rate of $5.00, for which one can have a year's subscription from November, '95, and all of the numbers for the past twelve months, from the beginning of Prof. Sloane's history.

The Income Tax Decisions as an Object Lesson in Constitutional Construction. By Professor Christopher G. Tiedeman, of the University of the City of New York. Pp. 14 8vo. Paper. Price, 15 cents. Philadelphia, 1895.

This is an essay which should attract wide attention among lawyers and students of political science. Professor Tiedeman, who is also the author of "The Unwritten Constitution of the United States," ranks easily among the foremost living writers of the Constitution. In the present essay he argues that the decision against the income tax was not based so much on the fundamental rule of construction that the intention and meaning of the framers of the Constitution must necessarily govern the interpretation of that instrument, as on the idea that the prevalent sense of right must be ascertained in all its bearings and applied to the determination of the question. In the course of his argument Professor Tiedeman gives a careful explanation of what constitutes a direct tax. As he well says in the essay: "It is not an unjustifiable use of the superlative to say that the cases in the Supreme Court of the United States involving an inquiry into the constitutionality of the income tax law have attracted more attention throughout the United States and created more popular discussion than any other litigation of the past thirty years."

The Treasury of Religious Thought for November is adorned with a likeness of Rev. P. S. Hulbert, D. D., of Oak Park, Chicago, and a picture of the Church of which he has recently become pastor. In place of the usual sermon Dr. Hulbert gives us his Statement of Belief, which, in terse and striking language, at once defines its author's position and defends the faith. This is followed by eight full sketches and synopses of sermons. An interesting selection from a Cambridge lecture by the Bishop of Ripon fills out the strictly homiletical side of the magazine. In "Applied Christianity" the editor gives the second part of his illustrated account of the McAll Mission in France. Another illustrated article on the Roman Catholic Church, is the second in a series on Denominational Characteristics by Rev. C. H. Small, Ph. D., late professor in Howard University; while Prof T. W. Hunt, of Princeton, gives the first of a series of Literary Life Sketches, under the title Francis Bacon, and Prof. G. H. Schodde of Columbus treats of Israel as a Factor in History. Rev. G. B. F. Hallock continues his interesting thoughts for the Hour of Prayer. Among the Names of Note are included, besides Dr. Hulbert, Louis Pasteur, Prof. A. H. Sayce, Booker T. Washington, and Rev. C. H. Yatman the Evangelist, who furnishes the first of a series of Bible Talks. The department of Christian Edification contains an interesting story from the pastoral experience of Rev. C. Clarkin. The minor departments are maintained with the usual care and strength. Annual subscription, $2.50 Clergymen, $2. Single copies, 25 cents. E. B. Treat, Publisher, 5 Cooper Union, New York.

South Carolina Baptist State Convention.

It has become a custom to have a S. C. Baptist Ministers' Conference, preceding the Convention. This year the Conference met at Greenville.

TUESDAY EVENING.

The officers of the Conference elected this year were L. C. Estell, of Woodruff, Moderator; J. A. Brown, of Due West, Secretary.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

W. Booth, of Union, read a paper on "Co-operation of the Churches." G. B. Greenville, read one on "Monism," and Rufus Ford of Bennettsville, read one on "Providence of God."

Wednesday evening the Convention met, and was called to order by the President, R. W. Sanders of Florence.

The Convention sermon was preached by J. H. Boldrige of Lancaster. Texts—Luke 17: 21; Matt. 6: 10; and Matt. 28: 20.

THURSDAY MORNING.

After devotional services, the report of the Executive Board was read by T. N. Bailey, Corresponding Secretary and Treasurer. He also read in connection therewith, the report of the Treasurer of the Board. The Treasurer's report shows that $10,357.16 have been received since last report for Mission work within the State.

The report of the Board of Trustees of Connie Maxwell Orphanage, was read by J. L. Vass, Superintendent.

This is the fourth annual report, and now as the Orphanage is, it has cared for 112 children since it was established. There are now seventy-five children there and applications are on file for the admission of other children. The fourth building for a home is being erected, and will soon be completed. When completed, the Orphanage will have room in the four homes for one-hundred children. The receipts this year, have been within nearly $8,000.

The report on Aged Ministers' Relief Fund was read by C. C. Brown, and shows that fourteen are being helped to some extent. Nearly $900 was received for them during the year.

Dr. Wm. H. Whitsitt, of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, preached on Thanksgiving day, a very forceful sermon from 1st Samuel 7: 12.

The Committee to whom was referred the report of the Executive Board, reported Thursday evening that they had examined the report of the Board, and that they approve the action of the Board in reducing the number of missionaries for this year, but advise that, if possible, the number be increased for next year.

Dr. Bailey said that the report of the Board to this Convention, was the twenty-first annual report he has been permitted to make, (in another State and this,) on State Missions, and the work this year has been harder to prosecute than in any other year of his experience in the work.

Receipts this year, (although not the largest in the history of our Board) have come from a larger number of churches than in any previous year.

L. Cuthbert, of Charleston, addressed the Convention, giving a thrilling account of the re-opening of the First Baptist Church of Charleston, which was closed only a few years ago, and remained closed for about eighteen months.

FRIDAY MORNING

After devotional services, the committee to whom was referred the matter of co-operation between the State Mission Board, the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, and the American Baptist Home Mission Society, for work among the Negroes, was read by W. T. Derieux of Spartanburg.

The report was discussed by W. T. Derieux, and by Dr. H. L. Morehouse, Corresponding Secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society of New York.

The matter of Ministerial Education was taken up, and the Convention was addressed by Dr. Wm. H. Whitsitt. There are thirteen students in the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., from South Carolina.

The report on Sunday-schools was read by A. J. S. Thomas. He said this was the first report the Convention had had on Sunday-schools.

A. J. S. Thomas of Greenville, Vice-President F. M. Board S. B. C. for South Carolina, introduced to the Convention, T. C. Britton, returned missionary from China, who addressed the Convention.

The report of the Central Committee of the Woman's Missionary Societies of South Carolina was read by C. L. Dowell of Society Hill, who also addressed the Convention on the subject matter of the report.

The report on Home Missions was read by F. O. S. Curtis. After an address by Vice-President Saunders of the Home Mission Board for South Carolina, the report was adopted.

The committee on Co-Education in Furman University reported that as the plan has been introduced and seems to be working well, therefore they recommend that the plan be continued as now conducted. Brief comments were made by a number of the members of the Convention, and the report was adopted.

The Convention agreed to meet Dec. 2, 1896, at Charleston, S. C. Rock Hill contested for the honor, but Charleston won.

SATURDAY MORNING.

The Convention was addressed by Dr. Harvey Hatcher of Atlanta, Ga., as the representative of the American Baptist Publication Society.

The report of the Board of Ministerial Education was read by C. S. Gardner of Greenville, and the committee to consider the same matter, also made a report. Both reports were adopted.

The committee on Co-operation in Mission Work for the Colored Population recommended that the co-operative plan be adopted; and that the details of prosecuting the work be referred to the Executive Board. Adopted, followed by singing and a prayer led by C. S. Gardner for the Divine blessing on the co-operative bodies.

SATURDAY EVENING.

The report of committee on B. Y. P. U. was read by C. S. Gardner and adopted. The report recommends the organization of Unions in the churches, under the control of the churches, and that the matter of State organization be referred to the churches.

Report of committee on affiliation between Furman University and Baptist High Schools was read by E. J. Forrester of Greenwood, and adopted.

The report of the Board of Trustees of Furman University and Greenville Female College was read by G. G. Wells of Greenville. Following the report were a number of short speeches on the report, showing that the members of the Convention are deeply interested in these schools. Evidently several thousand dollars will be added to the endowment of the University within the next few years. A plan was devised and has begun to work, whereby the endowment shall be increased annually for the next five years.

SUNDAY.

Pulpits were filled to day by many members of the Convention. In the afternoon, memorial services were held, and the committee on Obituaries made their report.

This Convention was certainly a model one. I don't believe I have ever seen a greater manifestation of interest, nor less friction than in this Convention.

No New Thing Under the Sun.

BY REV. J. K. FAULKNER.

Dear Recorder:—Apropos to "Orthographic Union" and its proposed changes, I note an incident our two from "the Hub":

In 1644 Roger Williams published "his immortal book," "The Bloody Tenet of Persecution for the Cause of Conscience Discussed."

"It was a bitter pill to John Cotton, the minister, and to the magistrates who were so ready to do his bidding. They gnashed their teeth at Williams as he passed through Boston on his way from England to Rhode Island, but they durst not bite. So Williams got safe to his free colony; but a poor man by the name of Painter was tied up and whipt because he would not have his child sprinkled!"

Again, in the sentence of Obadiah Holmes, 1651, "Forasmuch as you, Obadiah Holmes, being come in this jurisdiction, did meet at one William Witter's house at Lynn, and did take upon you to preach and baptize upon the Lord's day, or other days,.....and that you did baptize such as were baptized before, and thereby did necessarily deny the baptism administered before to be baptism, the churches no churches, and also other ordinances and ministers, as if all was a nullity; and did also deny the lawfulness of baptising of infants; and all this tends to the dishonor of God," &c., the court doth fine you thirty pounds.....to be paid, or else well whipt, and that you shall remain in prison until it be paid or security be given in for it."

Mr. Holmes was whipped, and he tells that "John Hazel and John Spur, who expressed their sympathy by shaking hands with him after it was over, were sentenced to pay forty shillings or be whipt."

Thus looking back more than two hundred years, the Independent may be reviving an old, instead of making a new orthography.

Since the Goldsboro pastor took our daughter, our family is all in the Old North State; and the Madam and I are beginning to hail, "Ho for Carolina!"

Mission in Southern States.—"And Jesus . . . said I have compassion on the multitude." Missionaries, 381; baptisms, 4,312; Sunday schools, 1 313; teachers and pupils, 17,970; tracts distributed, 584 933.

Study Topics—Changed conditions. Religious resources of certain States not sufficient to meet demands in those States. City evangelization. Destitute regions. Immigration. Importance of prompt action.

Christmas programs and envelopes will be sent free in any number desired on application to Miss Fannie E. S. Heck, Raleigh.

A selection intended for this department, headed "A Story for the Christmas Offering," will be found on the eighth page.

While the Missionary Societies every where have great reason to rejoice over the splendid annual report for the year just closed, the contributions of the Societies to the general work of Foreign Missions are not as large as they should be at this time of the year. We would therefore urge all the Societies to observe the Christmas Offering. This has for some years been a regular part of the Societies' work, the contributions made at this time going to the general work of missions in China.

Last Christmas the North Carolina Societies gave $300 as a Christmas Offering. The Central Committee earnestly urges that they make this $400 this year. To this Offering only forty-five Societies contributed. While asking that each of these strive to give what they gave then, the larger number of Societies who gave nothing in this way last year, are urged to give something.

Though named a Christmas Offering, the date fixed is January 8th, so that there will still be time to carry out plans for it when this reaches you. The entertaining and instructive program which has been prepared to make the occasion of the ingathering of the Offering one of marked interest, requires no previous preparation save the selection of readers for the various parts. The whole is designed to be a picture of the life of Chinese women and is made up largely of contributions from our lady missionaries. These programs and Offering envelopes will be sent free in any number desired.

Let it be remembered that we stand pledged to the missionaries now on the field for support.

Let it be remembered also by the Woman's Missionary Societies that their part of this unwritten pledge lacks much of fulfilment.

Miss FANNIE E. S HECK.

Echoes from the Annual Meeting.

"Did you enjoy the woman's meetings during the Convention?" This question has doubtless been asked each one since her return from Greensboro. We are sure "yes" can be answered for all without waiting to take the vote. But enjoyment was not the prime object, and the most important question is, Were we prepared for better service by these meetings? The answer comes readily, "we should be"; and it is our own fault if we were not encouraged and strengthened.

The social feature is a most helpful and inspiring one. All acknowledge the electric thrill which comes from comradeship and cordial handshaking. Thus workers learn to know and love one another, and personal friendships are formed for mutual encouragement and benefit. The younger women are strengthened by the strong faith and self-sacrificing lives of many who are older, and who have borne heavy burdens and labored long, earnestly, patiently, in the Master's vineyard. Did not our hearts burn within us as we heard, through others, of the work done by dear Mrs. Payne in the hard struggle of the Greensboro church? Was not her bright, happy, interested face a perfect inspiration to us all? Then, too, the older women rejoice to see others being trained to take their places, and are glad to know that the gospel good news is being proclaimed by the host of women who publish the glad tidings.

The week of prayer was mentioned as being a great spiritual uplift to all the Societies in which it had been observed. One Society reported a program arranged for the week, and each afternoon the service was put in charge of a Missionary Society. By this means all those of other denominations who were interested in missions came in touch, and the attendance was large and the interest and enjoyment widespread.

Christmas—what of it, and how should it be observed? From the reports and suggestions it would seem that all thought a praise service and a thank offering most appropriate for the day. Surely this is the truest, the best way to spend a part of the gladdest, happiest day of the year.

The benefit derived from self-denial week was reported in words and contributions, though the amount collected was not large. There are many who say, "I do not see where I can deny myself; I only have the necessary things of life." And yet, is this true; have we ever really and truly denied ourselves anything we wanted very much, for the Master's sake?

One lady said, "I find some who misunderstand the Yates Memorial, and say they are not willing to put money into a monument; they do not think it would be pleasing to Dr. and Mrs. Yates." We answer most emphatically, "No, it would not;" and the only monument upon which they can smile from their heavenly home, among those who have come through great tribulation, is one made of human hearts rescued from ignorance, superstition and sin. Our memorial is the imperishable one which will be able to stand amid the "wreck of matter and the crush of worlds."

The echoed sentiment of all our workers is, we cannot forego the pleasure and honor of having part in this indestructible, everlasting memorial. There is no doubt the whole amount will be raised before the meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention in May.

The onward movement of our work was most noticeable in the reports from our Young Women's Missionary Societies, and also from the Children's Mission Bands. These two departments should be encouraged, emphasized and stimulated, and be more largely represented at our annual meetings. These young people are the hope of our churches, and will soon be the leaders. Let us help them to know better and do better than we have done.

While the annual meeting was not so largely attended as could have been desired, yet all came with one heart and one purpose. A most remarkable feature was that not one discouraging note was sounded; but every one, even those reporting and regretting the small number of members and meager contributions, yet looked hopefully into the new year with praise, prayer and perseverance for the coming duties, and welcome for the waiting service.

One lady who reported herself as too timid to even answer a question in one of her own missionary meetings, after getting fully warmed and becoming enthusiastic in her admiration and praise for our president, and the work she was doing, said, "If I attend many more of these meetings I shall be speaking out before I know it." This is as it should be in our home Missionary Societies and in our annual meetings. We should become so thoroughly interested in the work that self is lost sight of and the Master's cause and the advancement of his kingdom the greatest aim and object in life.

CANTON, CHINA, Oct. 28, 1895

Dear Miss Armstrong:—You ask me to tell you about my work. May I, instead, tell you about some whom I have met in my work? I have met them but once or twice, so I can tell you only a little, but they seem to be photographed upon my memory. Shall I try to help you to see them?

It is a dirty house. A half blind woman is mending a torn garment. A blind singing girl, who has led a sinful life, sits near her. Suddenly, a lame boy, with the swiftness of a cat, crawls across the room and crouches at my feet. He is a veritable Ishmael, his hand is against every man and every man's hand is against him. He is knocked at as if he were a dog, and in turn he does his own striking at dogs and children who come between himself and me.

From the moment I begin to speak, there is an earnest look from the upturned face. When I tell of a God who loves and pities—who, in his great love let them nail him to a cross for us, his dark eyes grow tender with the thought of a love like this, and he seems to drink in every word. "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes"—that even this ignorant, crippled heathen boy has had some glimpses of that love which "passeth understanding."

In a heathen home, a woman is listening for the first time as I tell of Jesus. "Are you sure," she asks, as if her soul's salvation depended upon my answer, "that if I pray to Jesus just as you said, are you sure he will save me?" I turned silently to the Helper of the helpless and breathed the prayer, "Lord, teach her how to pray," realizing that even this earnest soul may be lost through faith in her prayers, instead of faith in a crucified Christ.

Again, another heathen home, and another listener. "How must I believe?" she asks, "I want to, but I do not understand it." "Teach me how." Ah, sisters in a Christian land! it is a solemn thing to be a time wen one groping in darkness stretches out the hand helplessly asking that you lead her missionary in a heathen land—a solemn safely into the light. In a Christian land, you fail, and another may do it for that soul. Here to fail may be to leave the soul to grope its way down to darkness and to death. How often in my "seeking days," I, too, had longed for some one to teach me how to believe. Now faith seems so sweet and simple that I longed to believe for her. But it could not be. So I prayed, "Lord, teach her how to believe," and then tried to make her understand that it was simply trusting an unsaved soul with an unseen but a pitying Saviour.

In still another heathen home. A woman listens silently while the other ask questions. The face is very sad as if all joy had passed out of her heart and life. She has heard of Christ's power and compassion. It may be that he can help her. So she asks, "If I pray to Jesus, is he willing to change my evil destiny?" She has had much sorrow and the explanation she gives of it all is, that she is "fated." Her greatest sorrow is, that she has lost her only child, a baby, by death.

I tell her of how Jesus blessed little children when on earth, how he loves little children now, and has taken hers to heaven. "It is even better for the child," I said, "than if the Emperor had taken it to live in his palace." To make it more real I said, "Jesus said, I will take this baby to my own home where it will never be sick; never have any sorrow; never sin, but will be happy forever more."

Then I told of David who said, "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me"—that if she loved Jesus she would meet her child in heaven. The burden was being rolled off the woman's heart. Hope came instead of despair—peace, if not joy, instead of unrest and the heart-crushing sorrow. Perhaps her life, after all, was not to be controlled by fate. God had been dealing with her in the past. He might help her in the future which had before seemed so hopeless. It is a blessed privilege to bring even a little sunshine into hearts and lives so dark as hers had been.

This time it is at the back entrance of our chapel. Passers by have been invited in, and a feeble old woman accepts the invitation. "Sit down, grandmother," I said. "Don't ask me to sit down," she replied, "I am only a beggar." "Even a beggar has a soul that is very precious," I remarked. At first she said she had no heart to listen—she was so sad. This was the story she told: "I am not a professional beggar, though I am begging now. I had an only son who died last year of 'the plague.' He was on Hong Kong steamer, had good wages and gave me half of what he earned. Sometimes when I have crossed the river in a ferry boat, the sight of it made me think of him, and I have been so sad that I have been on the point of committing suicide by drowning myself, but I have been dissuaded from it by others." She told us between tears and sobs of the good, faithful son. She went on to say: "I was never covetous, I gave to others when I had it to give. I have tried to be kind to others. The other day I led a blind beggar over a slippery place, fearing he would fall. I have usually begged enough food. The gods have been kind to me. But somehow I seem to have lost their favor during the last few days I have gone out and come back with scarcely anything. I have not had enough altogether for a single meal the last three days. The woman who lets me live with her is very poor, so I have not let her know how hungry I was for fear she would share her food with me. When she has asked: 'Have you eaten your rice?' I have said, 'Yes, I have eaten plenty.'" (She thought her motive being good, justified her in telling an untruth).

I told the sorrowing old woman of Jesus' sympathy with the widow of Nain—that he did not give us back our dead; he comforts our hearts so that it is not so hard to do without them. "Tell all your sorrows to Jesus," I said. "He alone can help and comfort." A very earnest listener she proved. The following Sunday she was at church. I asked if she had been praying to Jesus. She replied, "Yes, I went home that night and knelt down and said, 'Jesus, the foreign lady that I met to day told me to tell you all my troubles and you would comfort me.'" Like a simple hearted child she talked to her unseen friend, feeling sure of his sympathy and his help. She added: "My heart is not so sad now. It is comforted and at rest."

Another burden which rests too lightly upon her heathen conscience—her sins—has not yet been laid upon the Great Burden Bearer. May the Holy Spirit lead her to Christ for pardon and salvation—then will her sorrowing heart know, in its truest sense, the peace that Jesus gives.

Again, at the back entrance of our chapel, a sad face, almost heart-broken woman, tells us her story. "Truly I am an ill-fated woman," she said. "Seven children died in infancy. Two sons lived. My home is with the oldest, but he grudges me the very food I eat. The second son ran away last year with a theatrical company. I had no clue to his whereabouts, but one day I saw him on the street and called his name, delighted to see him once more. He would not recognize me; denied even his name." The poor woman's cup of bitterness was full. All we could do was to tell her of "the God of all consolation," feeling that "earth has no sorrow that heaven cannot heal."

I have tried to tell you of some whom I have met who have begun to grope their way towards the light—pray for them. Pray, too, for the thousands here who know of Jesus, yet care nothing for him or his salvation. Pray that in dealing with all I may be taught of God.

Yours with Christian love,

Pastorless Churches.

The recent suggestion made by Dr. Simms that the late Convention make earnest prayer to God for the special guidance of the Holy Spirit in the selection of a Corresponding Secretary was timely; and one which all pastorless churches will do well to consider; for we are too often tempted to lean to our understanding in such matters, and extend a call more upon the commendation of our own judgment, or the recommendation of men than under the leadings of the Spirit of God.

The Holy Spirit will never make a mistake, as is often done without Him, but will always direct the right man to the right place at the right time, if we will follow Him.

W. B. MORTON.

A New Book

SENT FREE TO CATARRH PATIENTS FOR A SHORT TIME—A HOLIDAY GIFT.

Everybody interested in the subject of catarrh and other winter diseases will be glad to learn that The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company of Columbus, O., is sending, free of charge, an illustrated book of sixty-four pages on the subject of catarrh. This book contains illustrations showing the brain the nasal passages, throat, lungs, trachea, bronchial tubes, stomach, liver, middle ear, etc. There are four full-page illustrations, showing the circulation, nervous system, glandular system and the vital organs. The book is a complete guide to the prevention and cure of chronic catarrh and all diseases of winter. Colds, coughs, consumption, dyspepsia, la grippe, bronchitis, and pneumonia are described and treated. Diseases of the kidneys, liver, lungs, ear, eyes and pelvic organs are illustrated, explained, and the treatment given. Every family ought to have a copy of this book at once. Thousands of dollars and thousands of lives can be saved by studying it and practicing what it teaches. It will teach mothers how to take care of themselves and shield their families from disease. Write name and address plainly.

Be sure to have a bottle of Pe-ru-na in the house, as the cold weather is already upon us. This remedy, wisely used, will prevent colds, coughs, and other ills of cold weather, and is the greatest catarrh remedy of the age.

To the aged, with their poor appetite, feeble circulation, and impoverished blood, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a boon beyond price. Its effect is to check the ravages of time, by invigorating every organ, nerve, and tissue of the body. See Ayer's Almanac for the new year.

School Notes.

The spring term of Amherst Academy opens Dec. 30th, 1895. Bro. R. L. Moore has enrolled sixty in the last four months. He is doing a good work.

Prest. Booth of Mars Hill College is meeting with gratifying success this year. Nearly three hundred students have been enrolled, and the prospects for the spring term are bright.

Brethren Prince and Wilson have met with such success at Scotland Neck with their Male School as will gratify their friends. We have frequently made inquiries of representative men from Scotland Neck, and they have invariably expressed themselves as proud of the institution. They will send several young men to Wake Forest next fall.

Please renew your subscription to the RECORDER as soon as possible.

Positions Guaranteed.

Any lady or gentleman who desires a good business situation and a good position should write for free catalog of Draughon's Practical Business College, Nashville, Tenn. This College guarantees positions under reasonable conditions, and will allow students to deposit money for tuition in a bank until position is secured. It is strongly endorsed by bankers, merchants, ministers and others.

Has no vacation; students enter any time. Board $10.00. It pays part of railroad fare. Four months by Prof. Draughon's method of teaching book-keeping is equal to twelve weeks by the old plan.

HOME STUDY.

He has prepared books on book-keeping, shorthand and penmanship especially adapted to home study. Write, stating your wants, J. F. Draughon, President, Nashville, Tenn. (Mention this paper.)

In cases where dandruff, scalp diseases, falling and grayness of the hair appear, do not neglect them, but apply a proper remedy and tonic like Hall's Hair Renewer.

A Remarkable Offer.

TWO QUARTERS FOR THE PRICE OF ONE.

The American Baptist Publication Society will put its periodicals to any school, not now taking them, at an introductory price of one-half the regular rates. That is to say, if any such school will send us the full price for the quarter ending March 31, 1896, we will continue the subscription without further pay until June 30, 1896.

We desire also to call attention to the reduction in price of the Advanced Quarterly and Bible Lessons, and to the fact that, beginning with January, The Baptist Teacher will have a Missionary Department. Miss Mary E. Wright, of Georgia, will report for the Southern Baptist Convention, Rev. F. S. Dobbins, for the Missionary Union, and Rev. J. W. Weddell, for the Home Mission Society. A view will thus be given of all Baptist missions, Home and Foreign, North and South.

Send orders early to nearest branch house or Philadelphia.

Scribner's for Christmas

Frank R Stockton has a Christmas love story, which bears a characteristic title,—"The Staying Power of Sir Rohan." Its illustrations are quaint and exactly suitable.

A thrilling Dective story by C. E. Carryll, entitled "The River Syndicate," perhaps equalling Sherlock Holmes' best work. Illustrated.

Sentimental Tommy

By J. M. Barrie.

Those who have read (and who has not?) "The Little Minister" and "A Window in Thrums" can anticipate what Mr. Barrie's "Sentimental Tommy" will be.

It is to be the chief serial in SCRIBNER'S for 1896, beginning in the January number.

Two Years for $4.50

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE costs $3.00 a year, but new subscribers can have all the numbers for 1895 and a year's subscription for 1896 for $4.50.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE is going to be better next year than ever. It is going to have new features. Its publishers are not satisfied with past successes. It purposes to more thoroughly deserve the confidence of the reading public.

The History Serial—"Last Quarter Century in the United States"—will be continued. Just now it is approaching a period of absorbing interest to the present generation—the first administration of President Cleveland.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE ought to get careful consideration as a Christmas gift. The $4 50 offer ought to get double consideration.

NEWS SUMMARY.

North Carolina.

One of the most awful disasters in our State's history occurred in the Egypt coal mine (known as the Cumnock mine) in Chatham county last Thursday morning. An explosion of gas in the mine resulted in the deaths of thirty-nine men, and the serious injuring of others. The mine had been inspected and reported all right only a few minutes before. Most of the men were married. The destitution of their families will appeal to many just at this time.——The Senate and House committees of congress have been announced. Our Senators and Repre sentatives were treated well, the Senators being honored with important chairmanships, and most of the representatives receiving like honors.——A telephone line, connecting "Tarboro, Wilson, Raleigh, Durham, Greensboro, Wilmington" (and Charlotte we should think) is to be established.——The Board of Public Charities met at Raleigh last week; it investigated the penal and charitable institutions, and found them in admirable condition.——The Beaufort insurance fraud trials have all ended. The last one resulted in the conviction of Hassel and Dr. Delamar of conspiracy, also of Noe. A verdict of not guilty was found as to S. D and J. Delamar on the charge of forgery. Of those indicted, all of the white ones except Dr. L. W. Perkins were convicted on one or more charges. He and all the negroes, with one exception, turned State's evidence. Judge Graham pronounced sentence about noon. C. R. Hassel gets seven years in the penitentiary; William Fisher, colored, five years in the penitentiary; Dr. T. D. Delamar, Sildon Delamar, J. C. Delamar and Levi T. Noe, two years each in Craven county jail. Each one appealed, gave bond and went home having been allowed until January 21st to make up a case on appeal to the Supreme court of the State. Hassel's bond is $1,500; all others, $1 000 each. The bondsmen are citizens of Beaufort. The defendants say the will fight to the last, and will appeal to the Supreme court of the United States if necessary.——We regret to hear of the burning of the Union School-house at Carthage. Loss $2,500.——The Vanderbilt mansion at Biltmore is formally opened this week. A re-union of the extensive Vanderbilt family will occur at the mansion.——The Greensboro furnace, which was put up at great expense by the N. C. Steel and Iron Company has been sold to Dr. J. M. Worth. The amount paid is $26,000, one fourth of the cost. We are sorry that the great plans of the company have come to this.——Judge T. C. Fuller of North Carolina has been re-appointed Justice of the United States court of Private Land Claims.——The efforts of the school children of the State to honor Senator Vance with a memorial is most commendable. Let every school have that great life put before it for study. The work for a Vance Monument is in great contrast with the foolish prating over the refusal of sensible people to contribute towards the purchase of a present for the U. S. Cruiser, Raleigh. We will take it as exceedingly creditable to our State if this effort fails.——Hon. Robert L. Steele of Rockingham, one of our State's best men died in a ripe old age last week. He was prominent and useful in public and commercial life.——The commission appointed to settle the boundary line of Virginia and North Carolina has completed the line on the borders of Hertford, Northampton and Warren counties, and is now working on Vance county. Eighty miles of line. have been fixed, and thirty more remain to be.——Messrs. L. Banks Holt and Julian S. Carr have disclosed their intention of giving up the breeding of trotting horses. The former gentlemen achieved remarkable success, from a speed standpoint, and the latter is now in possession of young horses of no mean promise; but being gentlemen, they could not afford to be connected with a business which is characterized by so much gambling and jockeying. The breeding of good horses is not only legitimate, but is praiseworthy, but a gentleman cannot afford to breed for the race course.

In General.

The President gave the nation two surprices by sending extraordinary messages to Congress last week. The first is explained on our first page; the second was an appeal to Congress to remain in session instead of taking the usual two weeks holiday, to remain in session to enact needed financial legislation. He says another financial crisis faces us. The message on the Venezuelan question hastened this. Congress will remain in session, but it is doubtful whether any financial measure will be agreed upon. All sorts of measures have been proposed. Another bond issue is very probable. The Venezuela question message received the applause of the people, but was denounced on Wall street; the financial message met with but little public favor, but wall street bankers like it. The financial troubles are mostly on that street; there is no crisis in North Carolina.——J. B. Pace, the millionaire tobacco manufacturer, bank president, etc. of Richmond has assigned. He will pay out and have a good sum left to start again.——It has been officially reported that the Turks and Kurds have killed 30,000 Americans.——The street-car strike in Philadelphia assumed such a serious form that, although the cars are running, people are afraid to ride on them. The leaders are being brought together to arbitrate.

If there could be any question as to the excellence of the Lesson Helps provided by the American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia, that question would be definitely settled by examination of the series now ready for the opening of the new year. The several periodicals are attractive in appearance; they cover the whole range of Sunday-school instruction, and they are remarkably low in price. Send to 1420 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Pa., for full particulars.

Pearl glass, pearl top, tough glass.

The Young Reaper and Sunlight have gained a deservedly high place in the esteem of Baptist Sunday-schools. They were never better than now; every number is a gem. With articles instructive and helpful, with the best religious and moral teaching, and with a corps of contributors better than ever before in their history, the intention evidently seems to be to keep them up to a very high grade of excellence. No school is properly furnished without these bright, attractive papers. Published by the American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia, Pa.

MARRIED.

ROSEMAN—PARKER—On Dec. 15th, 1895, at the Baptist parsonage in East Durham, N. C., by Rev. O. C. Horton, Mr. Jerome C. Roseman and Miss Mary E. Parker, both of Durham.

CHANDLER—ADAMS—On Nov. 15th, 1895, at the residence of the bride's parents, by Rev. G. W. Coppedge, Mr. S. P. Chandler and Miss Dora Adams, only daughter of A. M. Adams, Esq., of Cedar Fork township.

DORSEY—PARHAM—On Dec. 17th, 1895, in Granville county, by Rev. R. H. Marsh, D. D., Mr. Wm. E. Dorsey and Miss Cynthia H. Parham, daughter of Mr. W. A. Parham.

STAFFORD—HOLLOWAY—In Raleigh, N. C., at the home of the bride, by Rev. J. F. MacDuffie, Mr. Samuel Stafford of Apex and Miss Cora Holloway.

DIED.

VANN—In her fortieth year, Mrs. J. J. Vann, nee Downs, peacefully entered into rest Nov. 14th, 1895, from yellow chills.

Sister Vann was a true and faithful wife, a devoted mother, a kind neighbor, and a devout Christian. She died in the fellowship of Winton Baptist church. May the Lord comfort the husband and four children left to mourn her departure. Not dead, but sleepeth. Her funeral was conducted by the writer.

L. M. CURTIS.

RAWLINS—Little Mary Guy Rawlins was born Sept. 12th, 1888, and died in Oxford, N. C., Nov. 15th, 1895, aged seven years, two months and three days. Little Mary was the only daughter of Deacon E T. Rawlins and wife. It is hard to lose a child; but O, so hard to lose an only daughter or son! Mary was one of the loveliest flowers that ever bloomed to cheer and beautify an earthly home. She was the joy of the family circle, the pet of all she met on the streets or in her papa's store. Bro. Rawlins, as superintendent of the Oxford Baptist Sunday-school, took little Mary with him to school when she was quite small. She noticed him ring the bell, and open school by reading and prayer. She went home and said, "Papa's a peacher; he winged de bell and den peached."

How mysterious that such a lovely one should be taken from parents and friends, and leave their hearts to ache and bleed. But it was better for her. Before she learned the corrupt language of earth she has been taken to the school of Christ to learn the pure language of heaven. Before contaminated by the pollutions of earth, she has gone where all is pure. Washed in Jesus' cleansing blood, she is "safe in the arms of Jesus." The loving shepherd has taken his tender lamb to the heavenly fold.

"See Israel's gentle shepherd stand,
With all-engaging charms;
Hark! how he calls the tender lambs,
And folds them in his arms.

Permit them to approach, he cries,
Nor scorn their humble name;
For 'twas to bless such souls as these
The Lord of angels came."

Bereaved ones, grieve not. "She is not dead, but sleepeth." She shall awake, and rise again. If you love her Jesus, you shall meet her again, "where no farewell tears are shed."

J. A. S.

Tributes of Respect.

Inasmuch as God, in his allwise providence, has seen fit to remove from this to a better world our beloved sister, Fannie Knight King:

Resolved 1. That we, the Missionary Society of Chowan Baptist Female Institute, place on record our appreciation of the noble work done by her, who was once a faithful member of this Society.

2. That while we deeply mourn the loss of the sweet influence of her godly life, and the work she was doing in benighted China as a missionary of the cross, we bow in submission to the will of our Heavenly Father who doeth all things well.

3. That we earnestly pray God that her life, her noble work, and the sacrifices made by her for the cause of Christ, may be an inspiration to us all. Also, we pray God may raise up from this Society others who may take up and carry on the grand work commenced by her.

4. That we deeply sympathize with the bereaved husband in the irreparable loss which he has sustained. Also, we would tender our earnest and most heartfelt sympathy to the aged parents, who, with hearts ever loyal to Christ and earnestly desiring the advancement of his kingdom, gave their beloved Fannie to be used entirely for his honor and glory. May they, with all her friends and relatives, remember that she is not dead, but sleepeth. Having finished her work on earth she has crossed the dark river of death, and is now with the redeemed in heaven.

5. That a copy of these resolutions shall be sent to the parents and husband of the deceased, a copy spread upon the minutes of the Society, and a copy sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER and North Carolina Baptist for publication.

WHEREAS, It has pleased Providence to afflict our brother and sister Tatum by taking their little daughter, Eva Rich, whose sunny disposition and bright winning manners endeared her to us all; therefore be it resolved by this conference;

1. That we as a body assure our brother and sister of our deep sorrow in this their time of bereavement, and extend to them our heartfelt Christian sympathy in their great loss.

2. That a copy of this resolution be handed to brother and sister Tatum, that a copy be spread on the minutes of the conference, and that a copy be sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER and one to the Davie Times for publication.

Christmas Bells.

I heard the bells on Christmas Day
Their old familiar carols play,
And wild and sweet
The words repeat
Of peace on earth, good-will to men!

And thought how as the day had come,
The belfries of all Christendom
Had rolled along
The unbroken song
Of peace on earth, good-will to men!

But in despair I bowed my head—
"There is no peace on earth," I said;
"For hate is strong,
And mocks the song
Of peace on earth, good-will to men."

Then pealed the bells more loud and deep,
"God is not dead, nor doth he sleep!
The wrong shall fail,
The right prevail,
With peace on earth, good-will to men!"
—Henry W. Longfellow.

When the Glad Year is Dawning.

What has the Old Year brought you, friend?
Joy and love and sweetness?
Then pass them along to others' friend,
That they to imperfect lives may lend
A little of your completeness;
For hearts should be brimming with hope and cheer,
And give no place to grief and fear,
When the glad New Year is dawning.

What has the Old Year brought you, friend?
Bitterness, tears, and sorrow?
Then let them die with the Old Year, friend,
Or safe rrom the sight of the world defend,
That none your gloom may borrow;
For hearts should be brimming with hope and cheer,
And give no place to grief or fear
When the glad New Year is dawning.
—Emma C. Dowd.

"A Merry Christmas."

Hark, throughout Christendom joy-bells are ringing:
From the mountain and valley, o'er land and o'er sea,
Sweet choral melodies pealing and thrilling,
Echoes of ages from far Galilee.
Christmas is here.
Merry old Christmas,
Gift-bearing, heart-touching, joy-bringing Christmas,
Day of grand memories, king of the year.

The Christmas chimes are pealing, softly pealing; the joyous sounds are ringing, ever louder and clearer, ever nearer and nearer, like a sweet toned benediction falling on the ear. Glad ringers are pulling the ropes, and in one grand swell of melody, Christmas, with its old yet ever new and marvelous mysteries, bursts triumphantly upon the world once more.

The cattle have turned their heads to the east, and knelt down to worship the king cradled in a manger; the houses are decked with holly; the yule logs burns brightly; the gray shadows sweep away; the sun is up, and bright-eyed children, who have lain awake all night listening for the patter of old Saint Nick's tiny steeds on the roof, only to fall asleep at the eventful moment, wake hurriedly to find the stockings running over with toys and sweet meats.

Beautiful and right it is that gifts and good wishes should fill the air like snowflakes at Christmas-tide. And beautiful is the year in its coming and in its going—most beautiful and blessed because it is always the year of Our Lord.—Washington Irving.

A Story for the Christmas Offering.

"Five rows of grapes from the sunny side of my vineyard." Very persistently did the words keeping in my ears late one snowy winter afternoon as I sat in our cozy library before a cheery wood fire. I puzzled for some time over the connection in which I had first found them; then I remembered it was in a mission paper where I had read a little story of a native Christian in Asia Minor who, when asked how much he would give toward the building of a new church, had answered, "Five rows of grapes from the sunny side of my vineyard."

Just why I thought of the words that afternoon I cannot say, but still they kept repeating themselves in my brain, and in time and tune with the sizzling of the sap from the logs on the hearth, over and over again, until by degrees the library, with its familiar books and the gleam of golden bindings on its shelves, became a dim and dreamy place,—the warmth of the fire changed to the warmer glow from a southern sun,—and I found myself walking in a great vineyard flooded with sunshine and filled with vines laden down with luscious fruit. Afar off in this vineyard I saw men and women walking, some enjoying simply strolling in and out between the laden rows, with the warmth of the sunshine about them; others picking and eating the purple clusters, all regardless of some tiny, hungry-eyed children holding out to them empty hands. Still others were busily packing their clusters in huge baskets ready for the market, so busy with thoughts of the profit that they did not heed the sunshine nor the summer air.

But these were not near me, for all around me were the vines of my own goodly vineyard. As I turned to pick a cluster of grapes, lo, a miracle! for instead of the clusters of purple fruit were huge bunches of golden coins. Oh how they gleamed and glittered in the sunlight! Half idly I counted the number of golden discs in a bunch near at hand, and found fifteen. Just the number of yards of material that I wanted for my new winter suit, and each coin was the price of a yard. Surely this was most fortunate, and, going on from cluster to cluster, I found in one the price of a new hat; near at hand, a set of longed-for books; tickets for the lectures and concerts of the season; subscriptions for magazines; many needed comforts or long desired luxuries about [illegible] gifts for dear friends (for I was not wholly selfish); and, in an especially luxuriant corner, so many golden clusters hung together that I felt sure that at last my coveted European journey was not far distant. So I walked throughout all my vineyard until I had numbered all the coins and each bunch was marked, as you have seen a gardener mark different varieties with a tiny label, setting it apart for some specific purpose.

As I passed along the last row, I was conscious of One walking at my side; and as I raised my eyes to his face I knew him indeed to be the Lord of the vineyard, Gladly I greeted Him, for I knew that from him had come the vineyard and the rich harvest found therein.

"Hast thou aught of the fruits of thy vineyard for Me, my child?" he asked, and I answered quickly,—

"Surely, O Master, all that I have is thine, and to thee belong the first fruits of my vineyard."

Yet as He stretched out his hand to gather but one of my golden bunches, I cried, "Nay, dear Lord; not that one!"

But as he turned to the second, I said, "Save me this one also, dear Lord."

"Is this one then for Me, daughter?" he said, with sadness on his face, touching a tiny bunch with but three golden grapes upon it; but, alas, one of those golden grapes was to take me on a pleasure trip, the second to a fine concert, and the third was a year's subscription to a current magazine. So I answered once again, half guiltily, "Not this little one, dear Master, but over yonder, in that shady corner, I think may be found some which I will give gladly."

Then the Master turned from me, with the sadness deepened on his face, and went toward the shady side, where the grapes hung in poor and scattered bunches, while I stood alone in the sunshine with my golden harvest glittering around me.

Suddenly the sunshine faded, and I found myself again in my library, with the winter twilight darkening fast.

It was but a dream, yet the words which had lulled me to dreamland sounded now with a clearer meaning. "Five rows of grapes from the sunny side of my vineyard." My vineyard was a large one, I knew, and although the golden grapes of my dream were not very plentiful in reality, yet I knew full well that the lines had fallen to me in pleasant places. If here and there were shady corners, yet I was not often called to walk therein, and the greater part of my vineyard was sunny indeed.

The vividness of my dream set me to thinking. Was I indeed gathering all the fruit of the vineyard into my own barns and storehouses, without giving to the Lord of the first fruits of all my increase! If my golden dream had been true, it would have been worth while to deny myself and give to the Master the fruits. "Five rows" of such golden fruit would be a worthy gift, and one whereof the glory would atone for no small amount self-denial.

If I could send the five hundred dollars needed for that little church in Armenia; could add the thousand dollars wanted to complete the publication of the new dialect Bible of which I had heard that day; could give thousands here and hundreds there, and a quarter of a hundred with a few strokes of my pen,—would I not give gladly? But of what account was it to give, by utmost endeavor, a dollar or two more to the Lord's treasury. If it were a question of giving up an illustrated, morocco bound volume of poems in silken case, that I would gladly have done; but of what use was it to give up buying the ten-cent illustrated paper on the train? Worth while, perhaps, to put the price of a five pound box of candy into the thank offering envelope, but what about giving up the quarter of a pound of chocolates I so often bought down town? "Dear Lord," I said, "if thou hadst given me great riches, and hadst bidden me do some great thing for thee, how gladly would I have done it."

"There," I said to myself, "is my neighbor. Surely he could give great things from his vineyard, but he does not." And conscience straightway answered, "What is that to thee? It is the grapes from the sunny side of your vineyard."

Truly those grapes from that little vineyard in Asia Minor were beginning to weigh heavily on my heart. "But," I argued, "must I give up all,—all my pleasures, all candy, flowers, books, and music?" And my heart answered, "Nay, for the Lord is not a hard master, nor one who claims all." Then seeking to know what portion the Lord did claim, I turned in the Bible to the "Laws of the Vineyard," and read this verse: "Thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and the stranger." That was all the demand of the ancient law. So rich a harvest for one's self; only the few unneeded grapes to be left. Surely that left ample for one's own needs and pleasures. "When thou gatherest the grapes of thy vineyard, thou shalt not glean it afterward: it shall be for the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow; that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all the work of thine hands."

I closed the Bible in the gathering twilight. If this were all demanded by the stern old dispensation, what were the demands of the new? Ah! there were no demands save those made by love; love, whose standard of measure was the love of Christ,—no law for tithes and offerings save this universal rule, "He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them and rose again."

Guided by this law of love, how little question there would be of duty or of tithes; for to Him who loved us, how gladly would we give of our abundance from the sunniest spot in all in our vineyards; give not grudgingly nor of necessity, but gladly and freely, without weights, measures, or values, for "love counteth not the cost."—Mrs. Alice G. S Derby, in Land and Light

PERFECT HEALTH
Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For eight years, I was, most of the time, a great sufferer from Constipation, Kidney Trouble, and Indigestion, so that my constitution seemed to be completely broken down. I was induced to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and took nearly seven bottles, with such excellent results that my stomach, bowels, and kidneys are in perfect condition and, in all their functions, as regular as clock-work. At the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, my weight was only 129 pounds; I now can brag of 158 pounds, and was never in so good health. If you could have seen me before and again after using you would want me for a traveling advertisement. I swear by Ayer's, and believe this preparation to be the best in the market to-day."—S. P. SMITH, 312 Poplar st., Towanda, Pa.

"I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla for general debility, and, as a blood-purifier, find it does expressly as is claimed for it. I consider it unsurpassed as a cleanser of the blood."—S. J. ADAMS, Ezzell, Texas.
